Drivers face transit gas tax

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The average motorist in the Capital Region District will subsidize urban transport to the tune of about $20 a year if a proposed transit financing formula is adopted and applied on schedule April 1.

In addition, electricity users will pay 24 cents a month to cover any transit decifit not covered by the gasoline tax.

The B.C. Automobile Association and the trucking industry immediately attacked the gas tax as double taxation.

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier and Victoria Ald. Bill Tindall of Victoria, directors on the Urban Transit Authority set up by the provincial government last year, and CRD chairman Murray Glazier all see the new financing formula as an improvement on what had been suggested earlier in the year.

The formula was detailed Wednesday at a Greater Vancouver Regional District meeting. The projected costs were based on an average motorist who puts 12,000 miles a year on his car and gets average gasoline mileage.

The formula, which will be reviewed by local councils before going to the GVRD Oct. 24 for final approval, calls for a 3.3-cents-a-gallon gas tax in 1980-81, which is expected to generate $14.1 million. It could escalate with inflation to 9.1 cents by 1991-92 and generate $48.6 million.

A surcharge of 24 cents a month would be added to residential power rates next year to provide $2.4 million. It is projected to rise to $2.16 a month by 1991-92 and generate $28.4 million.

The provincial government will pick up 75 per cent of any deficit for the first two years, then 70 per cent in the third year and 66⅔ per cent in the fourth and fifth years.

Vancouver Mayor Jack Volrich said he intends to recommend acceptance of the formula, which covers cost-sharing, revenue sources and control of the operating company, to both city council and the UTA of which he is chairman.

Howard Crompton, BCAA president, said the association will launch an anti-tax campaign.

"Gasoline is already subjected to federal taxes and provincial taxes of more than 50 cents a gallon . . . the addition of a further transit tax is an unwarranted imposition on individuals who are already the heaviest taxed," Crompton said.

He said it is unfair to place an additional tax on the motorist, who will be the most infrequent user of mass transit.

The B.C. Motor Transport Association also criticized the tax.

"Our job is to carry freight not people. Therefore the trucking industry shouldn't STUCK IN REVERSE is the way Ohio geologist David Beckman defines U.S. energy legislation — and he's designed a 'backwards' car to make his point. Beckman, seated behind backseat steering wheel, plans to take his odd auto on a tour of 19 states to display his low opinion of U.S. energy policies.

Oil demand surge raises fear of war

VIENNA (UPI) — Two officials of the powerful OPEC oil cartel predict international demand for petroleum will skyrocket and the next world war could be a conflict over the precious resource.

The secretary general of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, Rene Ortiz, opened a three-day OPEC energy seminar Wednesday by predicting oil demands will go up 50 percent in the next 10 years.

He said oil demand will be 85 million barrels a day by 1990 compared with the present world consumption of some 60 million barrels. And, he said, the 13 nations of OPEC will be expected to produce 46 to 50 million barrels of oil a day compared with the present 31 million barrels daily.

Then in an ominous warning, Mana Saeed Otaiba, the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, said, "OPEC cannot forever continue to raise its oil production to make up the balance between supply and demand."

Pleading for talks between oil producers and consumers, he said, "If we do not have a dialogue then we shall be left with confrontation."

"I have to say in an open manner that if there is going to be another world war it will be an oil war."

Otaiba praised Saudi Arabia for raising its oil production by one million barrels a day to make up the difference between supply and demand caused by the Iranian crisis.

He warned, however, that this was only a temporary measure.

Otaiba told the 200 delegates from oil-producing and consuming countries that the decline of the dollar and the inflation in the West have eroded the purchasing power of OPEC oil revenues.

"Since our last meeting in Geneva, the purchasing power of our oil revenues has dropped by more than five per cent," he said. "Until our next meeting in December in Caracas (Venezuela), I am sure it will go down further."

Libyan oil minister Ezzedin Ali Mabruk told reporters at the semi-closed seminar that his country has canceled some oil sales contracts with several major oil companies effective Jan. 1.

He said Libya would supply oil only to those firms and nations that make investments to look for more oil in Libya.

Huge August trade gap

OTTAWA (CP) — For the first time this year, there was a deficit in the balance of trade.

Government figures released today show a $141-million gap between imports and the merchandise Canada sold abroad in August.

Statistics Canada reported that exports increased by a mere 3.1 per cent in August from July, but imports rose by 6.4 per cent in the same period, leaving the country in the red in its merchandise account with the rest of the world.

Imports during August were valued at $5.45 billion while export sales amounted to $5.31 billion.

The $2-billion trade surplus Finance Minister John Crosbie has predicted for the year is beginning to look almost unreachable. Two-thirds of the way through 1979, the surplus was $857 million.

The figures contained further bad news for the government and business community.

The $77-million surplus previously reported for July, on a preliminary basis a month ago, was revised to $28 million.

Since the beginning of June, there has been total surplus in merchandise trade of less than $100 million.

If the government is forced to revise the August figure because final statistics show the situation worse than it now appears during that month, the three-month

Pope dashes hopes

PHILADELPHIA (Reuter) — Pope John Paul has dashed the hopes of liberal Roman Catholics by declaring that he will not relax the rules of priestly celibacy and irrevocable commitment to the priesthood.

During his first three days in the United States, the Pope has proved that, while he is among the most charismatic of recent pontiffs, he is also one of the most orthodox.

Nowhere in the three cities he has visited since arriving on Monday has the Pope's concern for Roman Catholic orthodoxy been as clearly expressed as it was Wednesday in Philadelphia, the cradle of U.S. democracy.

At a mass attended by one million faithful in Philadelphia's Logan Circle, he warned Americans not to use freedom as an excuse for sexual licence.

Later in a speech to seminarians, John Paul said that priests make "an irrevocable commitment" to celibacy and to remaining in the priesthood.

"Consider whether Christ is calling you to the celibate life," he said. "You can make a responsible decision for celibacy only after you have reached the firm conviction that Christ is indeed offering you this gift which is intended for the good of the church and for the service of others."

Review asked on jail checks

A review should be made of procedures city police use to detect injuries or ailments of persons held in cells overnight, Mayor Mike Young, chairman of the police board, said today.

Young said he expects the board will make the request at either its next meeting or the one following.

He said he was disturbed by a report that a 15-year-old runaway girl had been held seven hours in a cell with severe injuries received in a traffic mishap just before her arrest.

But he said his main concern was not so much the incident as the detection procedures used by police and jail staff to determine an inmate's well-being.

He called the case involving the girl a rarity but added "that it occurred at all is enough to ask if the procedures we have been using are satisfactory or not.

"I think we've been very lucky, considering the number of people the police are handling, that we've had very few incidents."

Chief Jack Gregory said Wednesday an internal investigation has cleared police officers and jail staff of any nelect or wrong-doing as far as he is concerned.

The girl, whose name cannot be used because she is a juvenile, received a double fracture of the skull, a severe concussion and a broken collar bone when she fell off her 10-speed bike while being chased by a police car on Government Street.

Mattress flip fatal

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman who was jumping on the bed of a New York City hotel fell to her death early today when she bounced out the window, her husband told police.

Police said that Sylvia Maninirios, of Montevideo, Uraguay, was found dead on the sidewalk outside the Taft Hotel in midtown Manhattan.

Her husband, Bruno, 29, explained she had been bouncing on the hotel room bed and accidentally bounced through the window on the 20th floor, police said.

Maninirios was held for questioning, police said.

Further information was not immediately available.

Gold tumbles at U.S. threat

NEW YORK (AP) — Arab money has forced the price of gold up, and U.S. threats have knocked it part way down. Now anxious traders are waiting for the next round in the war of nerves.

The price of gold shot up from $281 to $444 a troy ounce in eight weeks before going on a roller-coaster ride this week. In a matter of hours Tuesday, bullion prices swung from $444 to $405, back to $438 and down again to $414.

Turbulence continued Wednesday. Gold fell as low as $390 before recovering to $393.50 for a troy ounce, which is about 10 per cent larger than the avoirdupois ounce commonly used in Canadian measurements.

In Europe, closing gold prices today ranged from $380.50 in London to $394.50 in Frankfurt.

The price started swinging Tuesday when U.S. officials hinted they might increase government gold sales to drive down gold prices and support the sagging U.S. dollar.

There is little doubt among traders that gold's stunning rise has been caused by Middle East oil money pouring into bullion exchanges.

Speculators, sniffing the chance to ride the wave to profits, jumped aboard, adding to the upward momentum.

"I'm amazed at the number of people who wouldn't buy gold at $150 who call up now and want to be told to

Socreds ready to take blame

Socred party executive director Hugh Harris said today the party accepts the blame for unethical practices advocated by a caucus research worker.

Harris said while it doesn't condone or use unethical practices, in view of the circumstances the party should own up and admit its mistakes.

"The party has to take the blame for what has happened," he said.

Harris made the comments in confirming today that Social Credit researcher Jack Kelly urged party members to play dirty in campaigning during the provincial election.

Kelly is on an enforced vacation until caucus chairman Jack Kempf completes his investigation into the matter. A decision is expected next week.

Meanwhile, Kelly has apologized to an NDP MLA for accusing him of using false names.

Kelly, who is alleged to have urged party members to write letters signed with names from the telephone book, had accused Victoria MLA Charles Barber of doing the same thing.

Kelly's apology was in the form of a letter to the editor of the weekly Goldstream Gazette, the newspaper that first printed reports of Kelly's comments.

Barber said his lawyer advised him to obtain a retraction.

MLA Alex Macdonald (NDP—Vancouver-East) said Wednesday that Kelly could not have been acting on his own because researchers work under the direction of the party caucus.

"Their bosses are elected members of the legislature," he said.

DND site offered for oil tank farm

By AL FORREST

Defence Minister Allan McKinnon announced today he will make a jetty available in Esquimalt harbor in a bid to keep the oil tanks farms in the Victoria area.

At stake are 200 direct and indirect jobs.

Meanwhile, a statement Wednesday by Oak Bay alderman Shirley Dowell that the tanks and the 200 jobs will go up-Island, possibly to Nanaimo, was shot down by several sources.

Richard Duke, Shell's operations manager for western Canada, said no decision has been made on a new site and the company has no plans to abandon the Victoria area.

Several sites are being studied near Victoria but he refused to comment on them while negotiations are under way.

The site decision is expected to be made in 1980.

Duke said Shell, Gulf and Chevron are in agreement that a joint tank farm should be kept in the Victoria area, if at all possible.

Mckinnon, MP for Victoria, said a pipeline could be constructed from the jetty on DND property and under water to Yew Point, which was identified in a 1974 study as an ideal site for the tank farms.

He made the offer to Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Mel Cooper and vice president Bob Wheaton in a telephone call today.

Cooper and Wheaton have been involved in negotiations to relocate the tank farms from the Inner Harbor when leases expire in 1981.

Cooper said today's announcement by McKinnon could be the solution to the controversial issue.

The Yew Point site was granted by the federal defence department to Parks Canada but the land has not been designated for parks.

McKinnon said he will apply to recover about 23 acres of the 120-acre parcel for the tank farms.

Dowell, who is chairman of a Capital Region District committee on oil tank farm relocation, claimed the three firms had signed an option on an up-Island site during a meeting Tuesday in Toronto.

She said this would cost 200 jobs and criticized CRD chairman Murray Glazier for not having found an alternative site in the Victoria area for the tank farms.

Wheaton said today said the meeting referred to by Dowell was attended by lawyers for the three oil companies — Shell, Gulf and Chevron — and the agree-

Absenteeism costs Canada $21M a day, study says

OTTAWA (CP) — A study on absenteeism says the country is losing about $21 million daily as thousands of workers don't show up for their jobs.

Some have hangovers, are exhausted, injured, sick or nursing ill children. Some are taking advantage of generous sick-leave benefits or indifferent bosses. Others are just fed up with a boring, uncomfortable or low-paying job.

Some cannot resist a sunny day and go fishing.

The study, prepared by George Sanderson at the recently-disbanded Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity, is one of several documents being examined by labor department officials hammering out a policy discussion paper for Labor Minister Lincoln Alexander.

An Alexander aide said Wednesday the minister is to decide, after he gets the policy paper, whether cabinet should authorize a go-ahead on a pre-election promise to immediately tackle the problem of absenteeism.

The Sanderson study, based on Statistics Canada figures and research by private industry and provincial governments, says about 83 million days of work were lost to the economy through absenteeism last year. That's more than 10 times the 7.3 million days lost through strikes, lockouts and similar symptoms of labor-management disputes.

"The costs to the economy are staggering," says Sanderson, who believes that individual companies can do more than government to combat the problem.

"Several studies have shown that employees who have a strong sense of participation and are aware of the relationship of their job to the over-all production have better-than-average attendance records," his study says.

"Similarly, employee attendance has been found to be better in those jobs that offer a greater degree of autonomy and responsibility."

He found that rates of absenteeism vary in different regions, companies, occupations and industries although there is no conclusive evidence of national patterns.

Some reports showed production workers are absent more than office personnel, unskilled more than skilled, and clerical more than managerial and professonal.

One private industry survey found that absenteeism in unionized firms — 9.6 days a year missed per employee — was higher than in non-unionized companies — 5.9 days a year.

Sanderson said a tolerant approach by managers — approving short absences to see a doctor or wait for a plumber — should reduce unauthorized absence. But he warned that indifference by employers to absences just confounds the problem.

He estimated that in any given week last year about 745,000 persons were absent from work at least part of the week. The financial impact on the economy over one year is roughly $7.7 billion, he said.

UVic fills senate seats

All vacancies on the 50-member University of Victoria senate were filled Wednesday with the election of four students to serve an interim term to the end of March, 1980.

A lack of interest during the annual election last spring became a contest as 12 candidates from the student body put their names forward to vie for the four seats remaining to be filled.

Winners are third-year student Thomas Murray, representing education; fourth year Jennifer Heath, fine arts; fourth year nursing student Joanna McMillan, human and social development; and MA candidate William Hutchinson, graduate studies.

In a housekeeping measure, senators altered the name of the physical education department to School of Physical Education, in keeping with the national image of such institutions. Administration and degree-granting remain unchanged.

Ostry resigns EEC post

OTTAWA (CP) — Sylvia Ostry, Economic Council of Canada chairman, has become the latest senior public servant resign following the change to a Progressive Conservative government.

Mrs. Ostry, who had been closely identified with previous Liberal administrations, will become head of the economics and statistics department of the Paris-based Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, Prime Minister Clark announced today.

There was no immediate word about Mrs. Ostry's husband, Bernard Ostry, who has been reported to be thinking of resigning his post as deputy communications minister to accept a foreign job as well.

Mrs. Ostry, 52, had a distinguished career in the public service beginning in 1964, rising to become head of Statistics Canada and later deputy minister for consumer and corporate affairs.

She became chairman of the economic council, an advisory group reporting to the prime minister's office, in 1978.

In a letter dated Sept. 28 to Prime Minister Clark, Mrs. Ostry said she regrets leaving the public service after so many years.

"I have never accepted important alternative positions offered me since none, in my judgment, matched the scope and significance of my employment with our government.

"Now, as you know, I have been offered a senior post at the heart of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. The OECD position will provide me with an unequalled opportunity to play a role in an influential internatioinal organizatioin at a critical period of economic and social transition for the advanced countries of the Western World, including ours."

A letter dated Monday to Mrs. Ostry from Clark said:

"As you know, I deeply regret your departure at this time from the public service of Canada."

Clark also re-assured Mrs. Ostry, one of the highest-ranking women in the public service, that she is welcome to return from Paris and work again for the federal government.

Religious fervor grips delegate at Pentecostal rally

Massive rally mixes religion with Hollywood

VANCOUVER (CP) — A massive rally combining the spontaneity of an old-time revival meeting and the organized polish of a Hollywood musical kicked off the 12th Pentecostal world conference.

The sound of voices shook the Pacific Coliseum for the opening address Tuesday night by Dr. Thomas F. Zimmerman, general superintendent of the Assemblies of God of the United States, to about 12,500 of the faithful.

"Listen, the Canucks produce a bigger sound when they score a goal," said Zimmerman. "Jesus tonight just scored a great victory — let's give him a louder roar.

"Praise the Lord! Praise the Lord!"

The Coliseum, home of Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey league, seats 15,600.

The rally was the first of five scheduled this week by the religious movement. The conference ends Sunday.

Alderman Bernice Gerard of Vancouver, a Pentecostal pastor, said members believe that Christians who have a post-conversion religious experience may receive supernatural gifts that were known in the early church.

Ms. Gerard said these are the abilities to heal, prophesy and speak in "tongues." She said there are two streams in the Pentecostal movement.

"Dr. Zimmerman represents the classical Pentecostals with his loud shouting style and constant references to the Bible. Then there are the neo-Pentecostals who generally come from other denominations, but have embraced the Pentecostal tradition of speaking in 'tongues'."

Zimmerman lashed out in his speech at liberal critics who say Pentecostals have no social conscience.

"The liberal crowd spends a lot of time telling us what we ought to do and commiserating for the social things, but we in the church, we can't stand idly by," he said.

"We do more than just revamp the hog pen and make it more commodious for the pigs. We believe in getting the prodigal out of the pig pen."

The audience, arms uplifted and voices rambling in different, unrecognizable "tongues", indicated to Zimmerman that he'd taken them to the "mountaintop" and they wanted to go further.

Grounded Otters return to service

West Coast Air Services Ltd. put its Twin Otter aircrafts back in service Wednesday after the planes were grounded following a crash which claimed two lives near Sechelt on the Sunshine Coast.

A preliminary finding in the investigation of the crash of the float plane Sunday indicated a mechanical failure in the reversing mechanism of one of the plane's propellers.

Darrel Smith, regional controller of aviation for the ministry of transport, said Tuesday the failure of a control rod in the propeller linkage could have caused the propeller to reverse its direction, making it impossible for the pilot to control the plane at the low altitude at which it was flying.

Smith described the mechanism as a push-pull rod which controls the pitch of the blades.

He said the ministry in Ottawa is issuing a worldwide air worthiness directive to all Twin Otter operators telling them to examine the linkages of the twin-engine aircraft.

The maintence check will be compulsory in Canada, Smith said, adding "there is nothing at this time to give us significant cause for concern about the Twin Otter. It's a good aircraft."

The plane crashed while attempting a landing at Sechelt on a short flight from Vancouver to Powell River. The pilot was killed and one passenger died two days later. Four others were still in hospital.

Alert Bay advises bank to 'go to hell'

ALERT BAY (CP) — Village council has responded to a request by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce for a refund on a business licence fee of $33 with a resounding no.

The closure of the northern Vancouver Island community's only bank Aug. 31 — after a month's notice — has caused complications as customers frantically search for alternative banking systems.

"We believe they (the bank) treated us very badly," Mayor Gilbert Topovich said. "I told council we should tell them to go to hell and they (council) thought it was a good idea."

Council recently received a letter from the bank's head office in Toronto requesting a refund on the unused portion of the business licence, which costs $100 a year.

Tax man strikes gold

SECHELT (CP) — A gold prospector has been found guilty of income tax evasion and fined almost $7,000 in provincial court in this Sunshine Coast community.

A spokesman for the federal income tax department said Raymond Whittle of Garden Bay was found guilty of failing to declare income of $101,155 in 1973, 1974 and 1975.

He was fined $6,865 and ordered to pay a total tax bill, including penalties, of $51,905.

Income tax department spokesman Rod Jamieson says Whittle's evasion was traced through audits on income tax reports of people who had purchased gold from him.

Free wheeling

The principle of free downtown bus service to reduce traffic congestion in the city core remains a good one. To prevent worsening of already crowded downtown streets, people must be encouraged to use public transit, and a free downtown bus is one way to do that.

Regrettably, however, the Free Wheelers service that began Wednesday in Victoria's downtown core does not come close to fulfilling the potential this type of service has.

First, the free service is in effect only from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily. In that time period, it may serve as an incentive for shoppers who want to gallivant up and down Douglas Street between the Empress and the Bay. It is unlikely, however, to have much effect on the people who cause the greatest parking and traffic problems — the commuters from Gordon Head, Colwood, and the other suburbs who drive into work each day.

A spokesman for the Urban Transit Authority said one aim of the program was to encourage those commuters to use the buses rather than cluttering up downtown parking stalls all day. He suggested that civil servants and other downtown workers would be able to park on the outskirts of downtown, then take the free bus the rest of the way to work.

It's an admirable goal, but just how many civil servants — or other downtown workers — begin work after 9:30 a.m. and leave before 3 p.m. The majority of commuters begin work at 8:30 or 9 a.m. each day and leave again at 4:30 or 5 p.m. The free service will be of absolutely no benefit to them whatsoever.

A second problem is the routes of the buses now operating in the downtown area. The UTA is proudly advertising the service as covering an area of 24 square blocks (the area bounded by Blanshard, Wharf, Belleville and Herald), but unfortunately no buses run in a significant part of that area.

The area west of Douglas Street is particularly short of bus routes. No buses run north and south on the streets west of Douglas, and the only east-west buses running as far as Wharf are those that are coming from or going to the Johnson Street bridge from the main stops at Douglas and Yates. Buses also run on Belleville as far west as Government.

East of Douglas, the situation is a little better. Many buses run up and down Douglas itself, and east-west buses run regular routes on Humboldt, Fort, Yates, Johnson and Pandora. However, the free service is good only to Blanshard — exactly one block from where the buses are caught on Douglas.

These deficiencies lead to questions about the likely effectiveness of the service. For the moment, the project is being funded for only six months (at a cost of $40,000) while the UTA monitors the use of it carefully.

It would be a pity if the whole principle of a free downtown bus service had to be scrapped because the details of this experimental project were not thought out carefully enough.

Do it right

There are good reasons for the federal government to introduce sport fishing licences for B.C.'s coastal waters.

The obvious benefit from money generated would be to help offset the cost of salmonid enhancement programs and regulation enforcement.

But the licence could also be used as a tool for better management of fish stocks — particularly salmon. Under the present system, resource managers can only guess at the number of fish taken by anglers. And that estimate process is becoming more precarious as the number of sport fishermen increases.

Information could be gathered on the number of anglers and where they are distributed along the 500 miles of B.C.'s coastline. A system could also be established to enable sport fishermen to help with the collection of catch statistics.

While most should agree the licence is good in theory, many will be concerned about how the program will be administered and how much will be charged for the licence.

Licencing should be as uncomplicated as possible to minimize frustration of purchasers. It should also not produce a bureaucracy that consumes most of the revenue generated by the licences.

The amount charged should not be prohibitive, although non-Canadian residents could be nicked a little harder. However, every effort should be made to ensure that guides and charter boat operators, who to a great extent rely on foreign anglers, are not adversely affected.

Licensing for commercial fishermen is now used to control their numbers. That should be the farthest thing from Fisheries Minister James McGrath's mind in preparing legislation to license sports fishermen.

A potential for U.S. trains

NEW YORK — In June, thanks mostly to long lines at the gasoline pump, Amtrak ridership rose 24 percent over that of June 1978, to a total of 2,050,000. It was the first month in the system's brief history that it had carried more than two million passengers. About this, two paradoxes might be noted:

☐ Oct. 1 brought a congressionally ordered cutback in Amtrak service.

☐ Yet, the outlook for a decent intercity rail passenger service now seems marginally improved.

The route pruning that finally goes into effect — lawsuits are contesting some of the cuts — actually will be only a small part of the 43 per cent cutback the Carter administration originally sought and Congress at one time seemed sure to approve.

Cutbacks unlikely

The summer's gasoline shortage — or whatever it was — gave Congress renewed concern for public transportation. The legislators largely rescued Amtrak from the administration assault and even improved its financing. Now, with energy concern continuing and gasoline prices drastically increased, it is unlikely that serious cutbacks will be threatened anytime soon.

President Carter, moreover, seems finally to have committed his administration to an expanded mass transit program — although it is not clear to what extent that program depends on the ephemeral windfall tax on oil profits. If Carter realizes that mass transit must be a part of an effective energy conservation program, he's that much nearer to seeing the need for intercity rail service, too.

A strong public transportation advocate, former Mayor Neil Goldschmidt of Portland, Ore., now heads the traditionally highway-oriented department of transportation. Goldschmidt, unlike his predecessor, preferred the limited route cuts ordered by Congress to the 43 per cent reduction proposed by the administration. He told the New York Times that he "would not be surprised if we had another Amtrak crisis in the next two years, comparable to the rush to trains during the fuel crisis" of last summer.

Nevertheless, the Carter administration remains no more than grudgingly interested in intercity rail service; whether Goldschmidt will or can make much headway in that atmosphere remains to be seen. And the major problem of Amtrak is still what it has always been — that no administration of either party and no Congress has ever given it enthusiastic support, much less sufficient funds and authority.

Without such backing, not even recurring gasoline shortages can make much improvement in the current poorly managed, ill-equipped, hamstrung system. With real support, much could be done.

Outmoded work rules could be eliminated. The 16-hour trip of the Montrealer from New York through New England to Canada, for example, now requires six crew changes, running up wage costs exorbitantly. Authority to hire its own crews under new and more efficient work rules would be a great step forward for Amtrak — and for lower deficits.

Amtrak also could be efficiently utilized to carry the mail, as trains used to. This would be energy-efficient (highway postal trucks cannot carry passengers) and provide much-needed revenue. American Airlines received $36.5 million for carrying mail in 1978. Greyhound Bus took in $152.5 million for its package express service in 1976.

A sensible public transportation system also would utilize trains and buses to the maximum extent, dovetailing their schedules as much as possible and making these schedules convenient to passengers. Incredibly enough, such cities as Buffalo, Pittsburgh, San Antonio, Charlotte, Omaha, Hartford and Syracuse are served by Amtrak only between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. The Floridian, one of the trains being discontinued (despite a 19.6 percent ridership increase in the first half of this fiscal year), does not include Atlanta on its Chicago-Miami route. Is that any way to run a railroad?

Snail's pace

Much roadbed work needs to be done, too. When the Hilltopper made its last run through the West Virginia mountains Sept. 30, it was grinding along at a snail's pace on track laid down for coal-hauling in the 19th century. Roadbed rebuilding would be cheaper than highway construction, but the mismanaged Northeast Corridor project is the only major effort now going forward.

One major obstacle for Amtrak is the persistent notion that rail passenger service must pay its way. That is not possible against the competition of swift airlines and convenient automobiles. But the government spent $1.8 billion in 1978 on the Air Traffic Control System and since 1971 it has spent $8.5 billion from general funds on highway construction and maintenance. The subsidies for Amtrak have been miniscule in contrast.

Besides, rail passenger service is needed for areas the airlines can't serve and to provide an energy-efficient alternative to energy-wasting autos and airliners. A six-coach train carrying 600 passengers produces 400 passenger miles per gallon - an unsurpassed potential, if Amtrak only had the equipment, the roadbeds, the scheduling, and the government backing to make it possible.

Blind shall see

Re: Max Low's excellent article (Times, Sept. 26) about Canadian aid and Operation Eyesight:

The article said that the province's deputy agriculture minister, Sig Peterson, who is also head of the province's aid fund for developing countries, came home after a 28-day assessment tour of Canadian aid projects in India for the federal and B.C. governments feeling pretty good about how his personal tax dollar is being spent overseas in Canadian aid.

Basically his findings are the same as that of the UN commission on food aid, which found that despite many extreme difficulties during emergencies and poor transportation facilities in countries like Bangladesh more than 92 per cent of the food grain reaches the people it was meant for.

But because the news media, to make stories newsworthy, photographs and writes only about the eight per cent food grain which is stolen or rots at the docks, etc. and not about the 92 per cent which is securely stacked in the little bags in tiny straw huts of the poor, many people have become so skeptic about the foreign aid.

The article also quoted Peterson saying "Operation Eyesight work is amongst the very best of all the projects I visited. It is almost biblical . . . that the blind shall see."

The legendary Canadian doctor Ben Gullison, the founder of Operation Eyesight, is always quick to point out that the project was started by the Great Teacher who walked at the Sea of Galilee 2,000 years ago giving sight to the blind.

Peterson, Dr. Jack Cruise, Dr. Scott Wallace, and others will join Dr. Gullison and Art Jenkyns, the president, to launch a Christmas fund-raising campaign for the Island on Oct. 6. Jenkyns will give a slide presentation on the plight of the blind folk and the organization's work around the world at 8 p.m., October 16, at First Baptist Church (North Park and Quadra streets). Refreshments will be served after the meeting. The general public and all the Operation Eyesight supporters are urged to come and see this moving presentation.

A $25 tax deductible donation pays for the priceless gift of sight for one blind destitute. Donations, which are matched dollar for dollar by the federal government, can be sent to Operation Eyesight, P.O. Box 565, Victoria, B.C. V8W 2P3. — Bish Bhagwanani, 20-72 Dallas Road.

Misses the point

Your recent article concerning chickens, cows and other beasts residing in south Oak Bay completely misses the point.

The fact that a few people may be upset or wakened by the sound of a hen in the morning is far less important than the loss, through excessive subdivision, of a beautiful property containing a Samuel Maclure house.

When will the municipality of Oak Bay realize that permitting old estates to be chopped to pieces is far more serious than stopping a few animals from roaming the backyard? — Charlotte Haywood, 71 Beach Drive.

Provide foundation

I read with interest the opinions of Genstar spokesman Barry Sharpe (Genstar: Hard line, Sept. 25).

Mr. Sharpe claims that the development permit recommended by Central Saanich council and supported during a public hearing is unfair and discriminatory. He also asserts that such control by the municipality is inappropriate because adjacent identical-use sites are excluded from the permit requirement, and no special environmental conditions prevail on Genstar's property.

The recommended permit is a means by which the municipality is able to control the environmental impact of Genstar's proposed 50-acre development. The scale of this proposal presents a greater potential for environmental degradation than smaller adjacent projects of an identical nature. This appears to be council's concern in 'singling out' Genstar's proposal.

If Mr. Sharpe believes that controls are unnecessary because no special environmental conditions exist, he should produce the environmental impact assessment upon which his statements are based. If no assessment has been performed, it should be — undertaken independently of the influence of both council and Genstar. Upon its completion and review such a study would provide a foundation either for Genstar's arguments or council's controls. Without this foundation Mr. Sharpe's comments appear to be premature. — James Bates, 11-1249 Rockland Avenue.

For the record

With considerable astonishment I read the "Ask the Times" column on page 17 of the Times Sept. 22.

The question of the day was, "Who was Dallas Road named for?", and the answer printed was Dr. Murdoch Dallas. Indeed, who was Dr. Murdoch Dallas? Definitely he was not appointed governor of the Crown colony of British Columbia in 1858 as you state. The first governor of British Columbia was Sir James Douglas who assumed office on the day that the colony was proclaimed, November 19, 1858.

Dallas Road was most likely named after Alexander Grant Dallas, who succeeded Douglas as head of the Western Department of the Hudson's Bay Company and married Douglas's second daughter Jane in March 1858. He left Vancouver Island to become Governor of Rupert's Land from 1862 to 1864, and died in Scotland in 1882.

That still leaves unanswered the question inadvertently raised by your column; who was Dr. Murdoch Dallas? Any verifiable information you may have about this gentleman will be very much appreciated by the staff of the Provincial Archives. — John A. Bovey, Provincial Archivist.

Help for natives

The recent series of articles on Indian issues in Canada by Douglas Fisher gave a biased view of the current situation. It was unfortunate he didn't give any comparative information. For example, in the second article one is left with the impression vast millions are being spent. Yet there is no comparative information to indicate relative amounts of spending. Assuming the figure of $778 million is being spent on Indian and Inuit programs, this is not compared with spending on, for example, unemployment insurance or the amount Canadians spend on alcohol (estimated at $4 billion annually).

It would have been even more helpful if Fisher had indicated how much of these funds actually reaches the native people and how much is used to support the bureaucracy — the 5,000 "person-years of work".

A major concern of all Canadians should be with the quality of service that tax dollars are providing. With little change in the quality of Indian life apparent, one can only assume we are paying for a substandard service and the key issue is not how much is being spent, but what is it buying?

Concerning the matter of special rights, Fisher suggests there is no "realistic" solution for recognizing these rights which, incidentally, have been legally recognized in the form of treaties, land surrenders and more recently in court actions. He seems to suggest that because these issues are complicated we should deny any claim because, after all, it happened a long time ago. Canadians have a right to expect our governments, as our representatives, to behave in an honorable and just manner. This includes living up to both the spirit and letter of earlier promises. World history provides numerous examples of the disaster that ensues when governments set aside law and morality.

In Canada we, as he admits, do have a sad history in our dealings with native people. Rather than suggesting what's done is done, we need to face some serious issues and deal with them in a fair and just manner. If we encourage governments to act in a high-handed manner we are condoning the same treatment on a broader scale.

The series of articles has opened a discussion of serious issues. In order for the discussion to continue with some balance, we are sure Fisher would encourage the national press and wire service to provide opportunities for the native organizations in Canada to state their perception of the issues you raise with the same national prominence as was accorded his articles. As he suggests, he is a native to Canada, so why not assist in providing an opportunity to hear from his brother? — Edith Adamson, D'Anna Carson, G. Allan Clark, Don D. Fraser, Mavis Gillie, Barry Jenks, on behalf of Project North (Victoria).

Third World plan

May I comment on the boat people issue that is now raging across Canada. I have some knowledge of the problem because I spent 20 years in international aid and, among other things, came in contact with Chinese working in the Third World. They were mostly involved in rice crop projects although their aid extended to other projects also.

One thing that has always bothered me in international aid is the fact that Westerners see the developing countries in their own image, which means that we spent billions of dollars trying to bring about development by industrialization just because it was the basis of our own progress. But Third World populations lack the basic education and technological formation that we had at the time of the industrial breakthrough, and you cannot educate tribal people in one generation.

It has only been this year, at an FAO conference in Rome, that international aid experts have finally conceded that the solution to Third World development and the alleviation of hunger must start by promoting agricultural development 'at the native farmer level'. That means, from my own experience, helping the natives make better use of their own tools and seed sources and gradually move them from the hand-hoe to training their cows and donkeys to pulling simple metal plows, and introducing better seeds and follow-up cultivation methods.

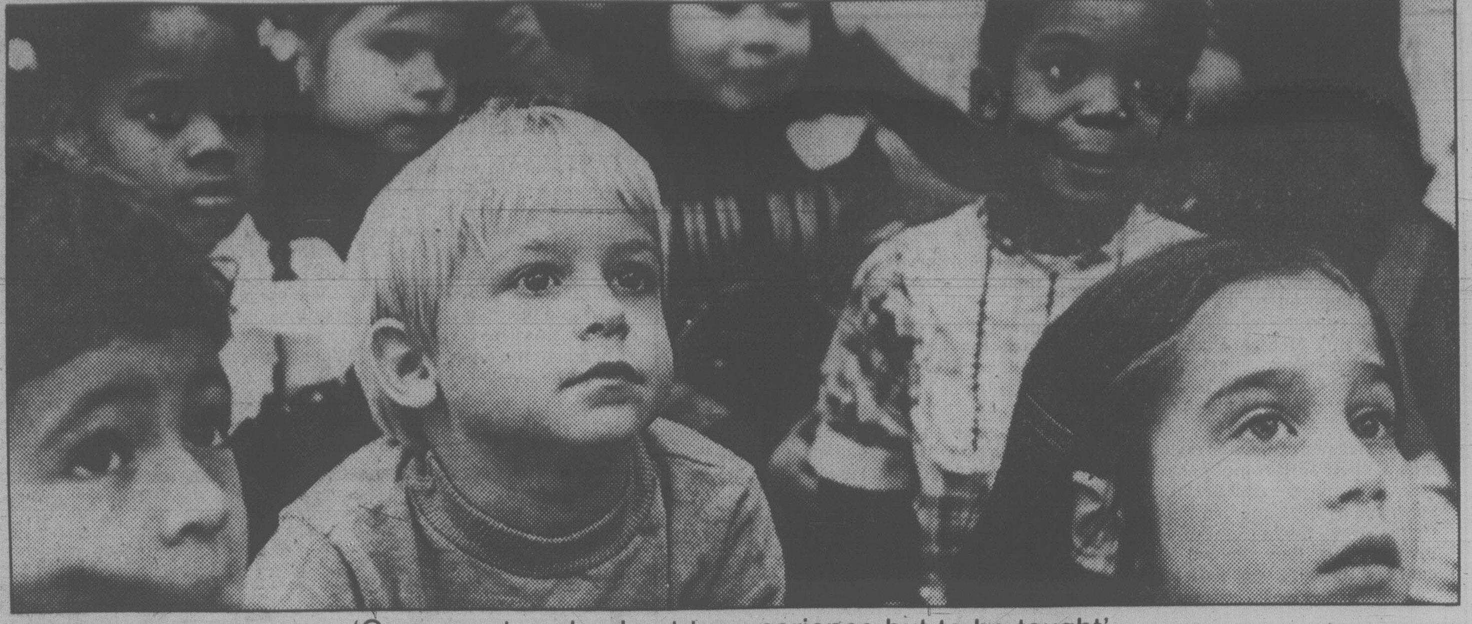
On some projects, we managed to improve cereal production (the basic native food) up to fivefold, and this without irrigation or fertilizers. It is a simple process, provided local officials and their governments don't get too greedy, too quick, and snatch away the benefits. But that is the fault of our aid formula, and it could be overcome.

Now to get back to the boat people. Although it is said that they come mostly from urban areas, they are a resourceful and hard-working race of people, and that is really all it takes, along with a 'little bit' of funding, to promote agricultural improvement in most of rural Africa (which I know best). The need is for aid personnel that can set 'practical' examples of how to improve the crude cultivation methods generally in use, and the necessary technology to do that can be taught in no time. Western aid personnel needs living conditions and much brain-washing, to adapt to living and working with natives.

In other words, our International Aid Agency (CIDA) should make it a condition of Canadian billion dollar aid, that boat-people be accepted, two or three families per village, in Third World countries where we work. — D. M. Trew, 37-1240 Newport Avenue.

'Back to basics' not the answer for our schools

By HENRY FAIRLIE
The Washington Post



'One goes to school not to experience but to be taught'

At the beginning of each new school and college year, there is now an almost ritual cry to get "back to basics." It is exactly the kind of cry that will not help us. I am all for the "basics," understand; it is the "back to" that worries me. When a traditional value has been abandoned — in this case, drilling a child into the ability to read, write and count — it cannot be recovered by just going back to it. There has been a break with the past; we cannot rejoin ourselves to it with a few staples.

Unless we understand this, there will be disappointment. Discipline in the schools will be reasserted. Grades will be stiffened again. Children will be reminded that the Three Rs consist of rules. Here and there some progress will be made. A young mind will be rescued from its natural waywardness, and from its deterioration into little more than stupor. But generally the effort will fail. People will conclude that there is indeed nothing to be done, and the public schools will be left to rot once more.

If the social critic can perform any useful function it is to resist every new faddishness. Lord Hailsham once put it another way. The task of the philosophical conservative is to extract the truth which lies in each succeeding heresy, he said; and there is perhaps no area in which the temper of the philosophical conservative is more needed than in education. But there can be as much faddishness in the cry to get back to basics as there was in the cry to get rid of them.

The fad which governed so many educational experiments in the past few decades was the inane idea that the purpose of education is to enable the child to express itself. One of the unfortunate results of this could be seen on the refrigerator doors of most kitchens. One went from home to home and there were virtually the same daubs of untutored infants, stuck to the refrigerators with magnets, and one lined up with other adults to admire them as if we were all tourists at the Louvre.

Child psychologists took them with an awful seriousness. Piaget clapped his hands at them with his own childish wonder, and almost everyone thought that they must clap their hands with Piaget. I was once forced by one of his disciples to watch a film of Piaget. I have seldom been so bored in my life. Of children's paintings and poems one may say that, except to the parents, when you have seen one you have seen them all. Aren't children beautiful, adults simpered aloud, haven't they beautiful souls? Children can indeed be beautiful, in their own appealing but limited way, but they do not know how to paint. Their pictures and poems are basically alike, because their personalities have as yet very little to express.

Eventually this fad was summarized in the phrase "learning experience," which my own observation tells me may now be on its way out. Clearly one will talk of a learning experience only if one has abandoned the more stringent notion of learning. A learning experience can be anything which anyone chooses to say is one. Life might be described as a learning experience. But school is not life, and is not meant to be. One goes to school not to experience but to be taught. A learning experience can be had without teachers, whereas to learn one must be taught.

One has to be taught, for one thing, how to seize what one learns, and build it into oneself. A learning experience is usually no more than the gentle lapping of the sea over one's consciousness; being taught and so ready to learn will sometimes be like an ocean pounding in storm at a sea wall. If the sea wall gives way, then it will have to be rebuilt. I once had the occasion to be the object, so to speak, in as great an example of teaching as I have known.

Among three cardiac defects with which I was born, my heart has a hole in it; it leaks when it pumps, and so has to pump harder than most hearts. It also makes peculiar noises which make cardiologists get very excited. I once went for a checkup by a great cardiologist at one of the teaching hospitals in London. He listened and looked very pleased, and asked if he could teach his class over my outstretched body, an invitation which I found irresistible.

The students came one by one to listen with their ears and feel with their fingers. The cardiologist told them to "rely on your ears and your fingers. Use the stethoscope only after that. Use the machines only to confirm." One by one the students stood up at their desks to say what they thought was wrong with my heart. One of them muttered something about a hole between the left auricle and right ventricle — or whatever it was — and the cardiologist turned to the rest of the class with all the contempt he could muster. He was a very gruff Scot, rather like James Robertson Justice, and he pointed witheringly to the one student.

"How can you be such a loon as to make that diagnosis. Come up and use your ears and fingers on the patient again."

The student examined me once more. He returned to his desk. "Do you now have a sensible diagnosis to make?" The student stood up, and repeated his first suggestion. I raised my head to watch the cardiologist. He turned to the class again, and James Robertson Justice was never more withering. "Not only is Mr. — a loon in his diagnosis, he is a loon enough to stick to it when he had a second chance. It so happens that he is, gentlemen, the only one of you who is right."

That was teaching. Thumping the thing in. Not least of all, thumping in what it means to learn, what it means to be taught. He showed my hole to his students on the X-ray. "No' a big one, gentlemen, but a hole. And you could ha' found it wi' your fingers. You could ha' found it wi' your ear." By this time I felt elevated but forgotten. "What about me?" I asked at last, as he dismissed his class. "Och, you! . . ." — he seemed to have difficulty in recalling me — "Och, you! . . . You had better be a wee bit careful wi' that hole. Avoid sudden and violent exercise. But dinna fash yoursel' overmuch. You're as strong as an ox . . . Good morning, sir."

The cry to get back to basics is a cry to get away from the learning experience and back to teaching. But it cannot be done simply by bringing back the old rule books. Three kinds of authority have to be restored before the rules can be taught well again. The life of education is no more only in them than the life of a language is only in a dictionary.

First, the authority of teaching must be restored: the authority of teaching, not of the teacher. You cannot simply say to the teacher, "Exert your authority again," if the authority of the function is not accepted. The whole society has to believe that there is a function of teaching in a school which is quite unlike that of any other kind of teaching in the home or elsewhere. Children are sent to school to have things drummed into them.

One of my daughters once came home full of complaint about her first experiences of school in America. I asked her what was wrong. "They want us to be happy at school," she said. "I thought one was meant to be happy at home, and to be made unhappy at school." Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings! In her 8-year-old words, she had uttered a truth. The authority of the teacher is not just a matter of discipline; it depends on acknowledging that all school teaching is a form of pressure on the child.

Linked to the authority of teaching is an acknowledgment of the authority of the subject. We cannot expect the teacher to teach unless we believe that each subject is a body of knowledge, which we cannot tamper with without draining all vitality from it, and among which the student cannot be allowed to pick his or her own way in selecting what to study.

You cannot teach ancient history by not teaching ancient history, and by teaching instead some woolly interdisciplinary "overview" of ancient history which makes it seem relevant. The subject is there, formed over years, and we cannot make rags of it.

Behind both of these is the authority of the civilization. We cannot hope to get back to basics if we do not believe that those basics are transmitting a civilization and its culture which are of infinite value. The reasons for learning grammar are not only to think clearly and then state clearly what one has to say. We learn grammar also because it puts us in touch with the past. The remarkable constructions of the English language are a history lesson in themselves which we can use every day.

Someone once pointed out that the word "civilized" is derived from the word in Greek which means "tamed . . . cultivated . . . grafted." He went on to say that "the civilized man is the grafted man"; he grafts himself with what his civilization teaches. Without such a belief in the grafted man, the return to basics will be like a plant in a breeze, waving this way and that and meaning nothing. There are no basics to go "back to" if they are without their taproot.

Our civilization is the anvil. Teaching is the hammer. Put the student in between, and let him be forged: as my daughter said, let him be unhappy as he is taught. Then the basics will look after themselves, and how glad the student will be later in life.

Some middle class comparisons

THE WASHINGTON POST
An Editorial

Middle-class life in the other industrial countries suddenly provides a piercingly sharp commentary for Americans. Until the early 1970s, the United States seemed so much richer than any other society that comparisons had, at best, limited interest. But that has profoundly changed. In France, Japan and West Germany, the wealth per capita is now, for any practical purpose, at the American level. While Britain lags behind, the difference is not quite so great as conventional measures suggest.

The thing that strikes the American eye is the extraordinary financial security that protects and envelops the educated Europen or Japanese in mid-career. For them, the crucial competition was much earlier, when they were moving through their brutally selective school and university systems. But once the schools have established one's status, it is not much disputed from that point onward.

People in Europe and Japan run less risk of being fired or merged out of a job, than their American counterparts. They generally have better health insurance and pension protection. But it is also true that this kind of protection heavily discourages the American style of restlessness that leads people to switch jobs, or to move to another city, or perhaps even to try an altogether different career. The justification for the American custom of continuous competition, and taking personal risks is not the one that most Americans have supposed. It is not necessary for an efficient and highly productive economy. West Germany and Japan offer adequate evidence to that point. Perhaps it will turn out that, in a world of very large organizations, security produces higher economic performance that the fear of losing a job.

Prices for most things tend to be higher in Europe and Japan, but there are also, less visibly, benefits and perquisites to offset them. There is the company car for the Briton who has reached a certain rung of the ladder, and sometimes a subsidized apartment for the Japanese. Paying for the children's college education does not burden families in Japan or most of Europe. The state allows far fewer children to enter the universities — and you will notice that is is the state's decision — but for those accepted, tuition is free. Some of these comparisons cut both ways. While paying tuition is no joy, there aren't many American parents who would willingly depart from a broadly decentralized educational system adapted to many kinds of youngsters following a great variety of interests.

In the past, most Americans have probably assumed that, as Europe and Japan got richer, their societies would become more like America's. Things aren't turning out that way. But clearly, as the levels of wealth become similar, the different ways of spending it become more revealing and more instructive.

In our bed we lie

russell baker

Have you ever noticed, friend, that when you are sleeping happily and the telephone rings and you reach an arm from under the blanket and say "Hello" into the mouthpiece, the voice on the telephone always says, "Did I wake you up?"

And have you ever noticed how you immediately and invariably reply? You lie. "Of course not," you say, or, "Are you kidding? I've been up for hours."

Scientific studies with laboratory mice have not yet shown how many persons will answer candidly — "Yes, you woke me up, and I hope you're satisfied" — but I bet it is fewer than three in a million.

For some reason, being peaceably asleep in your bed is looked upon as a deed so degrading that people are ashamed to confess it over the telephone. Most murderers of whom I have had knowledge could scarcely wait to get to the police and confess their guilt, but imagine any one of them deciding to pause for a nap before going to the police station, and imagine the chief of detectives interrupting his slumber with a phone call.

"Did I wake you up?" the chief would surely ask.

"Of course not," the murderer would lie. And perhaps, to show that slumber was of no interest to him whatever, he might garnish his answer by saying, "In fact, I was just brushing my teeth before calling you up to confess a murder."

Why is it easier for people to confess to murder than to being asleep when the telephone rings?

An equally mysterious question: How does the caller always know that he has awakened his victim? Through decades of being telephoned out of sleep, I recollect not one case in which the caller did not know instantly that he had awakened me.

Think for a moment of your own experience. It is 8 a.m. and you have been up since 6. The telephone rings. "Hello," you say. Does the caller ever, under this circumstance, say, "Did I wake you up?" Of course not. He knows — don't ask me how — that you have been up for at least two hours.

The same person calling at 10 a.m. the next day when you are sleeping merrily will immediately say, "Did I wake you up?"

He knows he woke you up. What's more, you know he knows you were sleeping, knows just as surely as though he had television monitors in your bedroom. Why do you insist on lying about it?

The lie makes you feel inferior and rotten and gives the caller psychological superiority. He realizes he has power to make you lie. He feels superior, for he is not the one who has lied over the telephone. He has merely asked a harmless question.

Or is it harmless? I believe this question is maliciously framed to give the caller powerful psychological advantage over his victim. Since he obviously knows he has awakened you, why does he bother to ask? Why not do the civilized thing and immediately hang up with a quiet, "Sorry, I'll phone later when you're awake"?

Instead, fully knowing you are addled and possibly suffering from a hangover, he takes the opportunity to subject you to a humiliating cross-examination. "Did I wake you up?" He knows you will lie. He lies himself when people wake him up by jangling his telephone.

This reflexive tendency to lie about sleeping probably reflects some ancient American belief in the virtues of early rising. Benjamin Franklin held that, coupled with early bedding, it made you healthy, wealthy and wise. Like so many of Franklin's sayings, this makes little sense today. Nowadays it is lawyers who make you wise enough to become sufficiently wealthy under tax shelters to afford a place in healthy air far from the city.

The early bird gets the worm, goes another old aphorism, and I suppose all Americans sleeping after 6 a.m. may feel subconsciously guilty about enjoying themselves instead of getting worms.

This does not explain, however, why most people are just as quick to lie about being asleep when the phone goes off at 3 o'clock in the morning and the inevitable question comes out of the earpiece. "Did I wake you up?"

At 3 o'clock in the morning? You must be kidding. I've been up since midnight getting worms.

Witty reply, even of this ham-handed quality, is never possible from a mind summoned out of sleep by clanging machinery. Even if it were, it would lead to greater humiliation than an admission of being caught at sleep, for the caller would almost certainly turn out to be Aunt Isabel phoning in tears to report that Uncle Norman had been gravely stricken with the boll weevil.

So we lie. Wake me up? Not a chance. Everybody is wide awake here in the U.S.A. Twenty-four hours a day.

BOLER ALL-ROUND WINNER IN FUEL ECONOMY TEST.*

In a recent fuel economy test performed on the three best-selling 17 foot travel trailers, the aerodynamic egg-shaped Boler came out miles ahead of its conventional "box-type" competitors, Travelaire and Wilderness. Up to a 66% improvement.

Two separate road tests were conducted on the three travel trailers. In each case, the same tow car was used, and identical testing procedures followed. In both tests, Boler delivered substantially better fuel economy than either of its competitors.

Unlike other travel trailers, Boler was designed and built for the fuel-conscious Eighties. With its light weight fibreglass construction and innovative aerodynamic design, Boler is an all-round winner at saving gas.

And saving you money.

MDs paid enough, patients say in poll

A province-wide survey commissioned by the B.C. Medical Association shows 61 per cent of the people polled are strongly opposed to doctors being allowed to charge fees over and above what the B.C. Medical Plan allows.

On the question of salaries, 34 per cent say doctors are paid too much, 37 per cent say they aren't, and the rest are uncertain.

Only five per cent listed doctors' earnings as their first complaint.

Seventy-five per cent of the 326 people surveyed by the Canadian Facts polling firm also say they are satisfied with the medical care they receive and 51 per cent say they are very satisfied.

Only residents 15 years of age and over living in B.C. were polled as part of a national survey covering a number of topics.

The poll also showed that just over 75 per cent agreed that too many people go to doctors when they don't really need to and that 60 per cent felt the doctors do a good job of policing their profession.

Twelve per cent cited as their number one gripe the complaint that doctors "rush you, don't spend enough time."

Those surveyed rejected the notion that all doctors should work for the government and be paid a salary, but they rejected more emphatically — 80 per cent — the idea of doctors charging patients an extra fee above what they get from the medical plan.

Clark releases letters on offshore resources

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Joe Clark released correspondence Wednesday outlining broad areas of agreement between Ottawa and Newfoundland concerning the transfer of ownership of offshore mineral resources.

The correspondence with Premier Brian Peckford acknowledges federal acceptance of four basic principles that were agreed to verbally when the two leaders met here last month.

Clark's letter, dated Sept. 14, says the same principles will guide federal negotiations in talks with other provinces assuming ownership of the seabed resources.

The same deal has already been promised to Nova Scotia and British Columbia and talks are continuing with New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Offshore resources have been a source of controversy between the two levels of government for 30 years.

Newfoundland has argued it was given control over offshore resources when it joined Confederation in 1949. But a subsequent Supreme Court of Canada ruling said such control belongs to the federal government.

Peckford's government had been ready to again take the case to court.

Clark noted that Inuit and Indian claims in coastal areas would have to be considered, adding that the government had no desire to take away rights already held by native people.

"As we discussed in Ottawa, these arrangements will certainly involve important regulatory, legislative and indeed constitutional changes before everything is in place," the prime minister said.

Firefighters flown in to save Wash. forests

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Firefighters from neighboring states were flown to Western Washington Wednesday night to battle three forest fires which were burning out of control.

There were no reports of injuries or damage to structures.

The largest fire, in the Canyon Creek area of southwestern Washington, spread over nearly 4,000 acres, said Sylvia Brucchi, a fire information officer for the U.S. Forest Service.

High winds kept firefighters away from the main fire Wednesday night although some were trying to contain spot fires in the area, she said.

About 200 firefighters were at the scene Wednesday with crews from California, Arizona and New Mexico expected to bring the number of firefighters to 1,000 today.

Two other fires broke out late Wednesday afternoon in the northern portion of the Mount Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest.

One fire covered 200 acres three miles north of Rockport. The blaze jumped firelines Wednesday afternoon and threatened logging equipment for a while.

Another fire, five miles northeast of Darrington, covered about 100 acres in heavy timber and old clearcut areas.

About 75 firefighters were at the Rockport fire while firefighters were pulled off the other blaze until today.

Man stabbed in domestic dispute

A 25-year-old woman is to appear in provincial court charged with wounding a 28-year-old man during what police have described as a domestic dispute.

A Saanich police spokesman said the man was treated at hospital for stab wounds to the head.

The incident occurred at 3:20 a.m. at a house on Colquitz.

Gorge nurses reject HEU

A bid by a group of registered nurses at Gorge Road Hospital to break from the Registered Nurses Association of B.C. and have the Hospital Employees Union as their bargaining agent has failed.

The nurses voted Wednesday by a 53-per-cent margin to remain with their professional association.

A total of 83 votes were cast, with 44 voting against a switch and 38 voting in favor of joining the HEU. One ballot was spoiled.

The move toward the HEU came in August when a group of nurses at the hospital — it was never made clear exactly how many — signed membership cards in the union.

The union then made application to the Labor Relations Board for certification. The board ordered that a vote be taken to determine how many nurses were in favor of such a move.

One of the reasons put forward by the nurses for the switch to HEU was that the union has more bargaining clout and is able to get richer contracts for its members.

The move was seen by some as a serious threat to the RNABC which represents about 12,500 B.C. nurses.

Recently, however, RNABC spokesmen have been making tough statements about upcoming negotiations with provincial hospitals.

One spokesman said the nurses will be gunning for a 29-per-cent wage increase when the current contract expires Dec. 31.

The nurses are complaining that their salaries have been dropping steadily in relation to other hospital employees and this is resulting in a shortage of nurses at many hospitals.

Expanded role for coast guard urged by MP

A much expanded role for a new-look Canadian Coast Guard within a reorganized search and rescue structure is recommended by MP Raymond Skelly (NDP — Comox-Powell River).

He has prepared a report on Pacific Coast search and rescue operations which also calls for a major financial commitment by the federal government to B.C. needs.

The 37-year-old freshman MP, brother of MLA Bob Skelly (NDP — Alberni), said the study was commissioned by federal NDP leader Ed Broadbent.

The recommendations, which Skelly said should be phased in over 10 years, would see the Coast Guard taking over vessels and aircraft from the fisheries department and the RCMP and becoming the resource and organizational base for all coastal responsibilities including search and rescue, law enforcement and monitoring of activities within the 200-mile economic zone.

"Coast Guard officers should be given the powers of peace officers," said Skelly. "This should enable the enforcement of marine and air regulations, fishing and jurisdictional infractions, dealing with drinking boaters and other criminal code infractions."

He could not provide cost estimates for the many changes he advocated, but said economies would be realized to offset some of the financial burden.

Among the major recommendations the report makes are:

- Construction of a central coastal emergency landing strip at Bella Bella;
- Creation of a civil air patrol;
- Scrapping of three coast guard cutters;
- Replacement of Vancouver-based crash boats that respond chiefly to recreational boaters;
- Institution of a service charge for assisting pleasure craft with breakdowns in calm weather;
- Replacement of communications equipment at CFB Comox;
- Purchase of new and additional vessels and equipment.

Search and rescue incidents on Canada's West Coast are increasing by 18 per cent per year," says Skelly's report. "The proportion of air over marine incidents is also increasing significantly.

The report notes that operations from the rescue coordination centre in Victoria now equal more than half of all search and rescue operations in Canada, but the Victoria centre gets only one-third of the total budget.

"If the budget cannot be dramatically increased to meet West Coast needs, then it must be reapportioned with half of Canada's financial commitment going to the Pacific region."

The report says that light aircraft safety and convenience is hindered because there is no central coastal emergency landing strip, leaving little room for fuel safety margin and no room for a forced landing in bad weather or if unforeseen problems are encountered on the central coast.

"The time and costs (of) air searches would certainly be reduced with the reduction in the number of incidents of overdue and downed aircraft if an emergency field were available," it says.

Skelly says there are indications U.S. interests would be willing to meet part of the cost of establishing and maintaining such a facility because of the heavy use of the Alaska-Lower 48 air route by U.S. flyers.

The report also recommends organization of a province-wide civil air patrol involving flying clubs and commercial airlines coordinated through a trained civil searchmaster.

Manpower and budget of the 442 Squadron at Canadian Forces Base Comox are based on an established monthly flying rate of 50 hours but in fact, says Skelly, the increase in search and rescue incidents caused this rate to be exceeded by 30 per cent last year and is expected to be exceeded by 56 per cent this year.

The defence ministry should immediately allocate the necessary manpower and finances to increase the monthly flying rate of the 442 Buffalos to at least 75 hours, Skelly urges.

Present search and rescue marine operations are designed around the three 28.5-metre cutters, Racer, Ready and Rider, which are unable to operate in deep water or in adverse weather, he notes, and are "now over their projected life use limit by five years."

The three cutters should be replaced with a modified deep-sea tug or similar vessel with all-weather capability, speed, modern communication and rescue equipment including a deck helicopter. Skelly says that compared with the maintenance and crew requirements of the cutters, this would be highly cost efficient.

Three strategically-based mini-cutters and several closed cabin rescue lifeboats also should be added to the coast guard fleet, the report says.

It also calls for additional helicopters and hovercraft and upgrading of present equipment and proposes moving the rescue centre from Esquimalt, outside)ictoria, to the federal transport ministry's vessel traffic management centre in West Vancouver.

Seaboard publishing raided

BURNABY (CP) — Raids were carried out Wednesday on offices of Seaboard Publishing Ltd. here and in Edmonton and Calgary by the RCMP commercial crime squad.

Sgt. Brian McConnell said the investigation involves allegations of fraudulent billing. No charges have been laid.

A Canada Post investigator confirmed that postal officials also attended the raids.

The company under investigation has no known connection with any of at least 16 other firms in the Vancouver area which use the name Seaboard.

Bryan Denham, general manager of the Better Business Bureau, said Seaboard Publishing is associated with a business directory called the Yellow Directory.

He said Wednesday the bureau's files on Seaboard Publishing were given to post office investigators about two weeks ago.

Ex-executive acquitted

VANCOUVER (CP) — A former Macmillan Bloedel executive was acquitted Wednesday by a county court jury of corruptly accepting benefits of more than $200,000 in dealings in the sale of utility poles.

The jury deliberated two days before returning the not guilty verdict on an indictment against Douglas Doubleday, who headed the company's woods preservative division.

New York

The stock market rose today, apparently passing up news that wholesale prices had risen at a 16.8 per cent annual rate in September in favor of word of a plunge in the price of gold.

Just before the market opened, the labor department said that its producer price index had risen 1.4 per cent in September, the largest monthly jump since 1974 and an annual rate of 16.8 per cent. Analysts said the news might further damage the U.S dollar. The dollar was mixed in overseas trading Thursday.

But the market apparently gained strength, experts said, from a plunge in gold prices to about $380 an ounce, about $18 below Wednesday's prices and $60 below the highs set earlier this week.

London

The Financial Times index was up 5.0 to 481.5.

Industrials, banks and insurances gained, oils were mixed and golds fell.

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were lower in active trading on the Canadian bond market Wednesday, refelcting a decline in U.S. market, analysts said. The short end of the market was off five cents. Mid-, long-term and provincial issues dropped one-eighth of a point. Corporate issues remained the same. Day-to-day money was available at 12 per cent. Lack of news concerning the expected dollar support program in the United States caused the decline, an analyst at Wood Gundy Ltd. said.

B.C. won't check into dental row

VANCOUVER (CP) — Health Minister Bob McClelland has turned down a request for a government inquiry into the affairs of the British Columbia College of Dental Surgeons.

The minister said he was refusing the request because the dispute involving college treasurer Dr. Murray Bloom appears to to an internal one.

The college voted last Friday to hold a court of inquiry to examine statements by Bloom regarding money paid to officers of the college.

Bloom, elected earlier this year on a reform platform, said he supported spending less college money on salaries to officers and more on public information about dentistry.

McClelland said he feels taxpayers would sooner see their health dollars spent on services than inquiries into societies which have the power to conduct their own probes.

He said he hadn't received a letter from college president Dr. Ted Ramage requesting an inquiry, but he had been notified that such a letter was on its way to his ministry.

Bloom has refused to resign as treasurer, or submit to a referendum of the membership, after saying some of the college's elected officials have received thousands of dollars, while others have not been paid.

Ramage said the college doesn't support Bloom's practice of discussing college affairs with the news media.

The college has asked its counsel to begin action to change the Dentistry Act to permit impeachment of council members.

Bloom complained in August that he was barred by the council from examining college financial records during non-office hours. He said the locks on the college's doors had been changed and he wasn't given a new key.

Bugs soon wise up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Pesticides aren't a foolproof solution to insect problems because bugs get wise to the chemicals used against them say some of the 200 insect specialists attending a five-day conference of the Entomological Society of Canada.

Because most insects live short lives and breed in awesome numbers, they often mutate in a decade or two, developing strains which thrive on chemicals which would have killed their ancestors, said Dr. Peter Bolton, a pestology professor at Simon Fraser University.

"You can apply them (pesticides) wrongly," he said. "If you give them too little for too long, the insect adapts very rapidly."

The development of third-generation pesticides has helped, said several entomologists.

"Third-generation pesticides mimic hormones, and applying them to insects at appropriate times will mess up their physiology," said Dr. Mary Chance of the University of Manitoba.

Applied in the spring, the new pesticides can stunt the growth of a mosquito or render it impotent, preventing it from breeding in the summer, she said.

But there are no perfect chemicals, said Bolton, because one pesticide might affect other species. Another possible solution is genetic control.

"In this what is done is breeding genes into a species, introducing a happy accident into the wild population," he said.

The release of impotent mosquitos in a problem area would cut the number of mosquitos bred in the next generation.

Farmland sprung from reserve

The environment and land use committee of the provincial cabinet released 700 acres of Fraser Valley farmland from the agricultural land reserve on Wednesday.

The property is owned by a Chilean consortium, Gloucester Properties Ltd., which wants to use the land for an industrial park.

The application for exemption from the reserve was turned down earlier by the B.C. Land Commission.

The 700 acres is adjacent to 2,000 acres which the land commission aquired for $6 million in 1975 for redevelopment as agricultural land.

Child hotline 'has saved lives'

TERRACE (CP) — A new child abuse emergency telephone service has already saved lives, says Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy.

"If we hadn't had the Helpline in the last few weeks, some cases would be statistics today," she said Wednesday.

The service has received more than 5,000 calls already, she said.

The minister said calls reporting potential and actual child abuse have come from parents, neighbors and even children.

Still no trace of Penticton girl

PENTICTON (CP) — RCMP still have no leads in the search for a 12-year-old girl who disappeared Sept. 26, but they suspect foul play is involved.

Susan Duff left her home near Skaha Lake for a bicycle ride about 6:30 p.m. and has not been seen since.

Despite extensive searches, neither the girl nor the bicycle have been found.

Guard wants jury

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Prison guard Konstantine Pondelicik elected trial by jury Wednesday on charges of perjury and assisting prisoner Andy Bruce in an escape attempt at the British Columbia Penitentiary.

Ferry Corporation's damage action scuttled

VANCOUVER (CP) — A British Columbia Ferry Corporation damage action against a union was scuttled Wednesday when a B.C. Supreme Court judge said he had no jurisdiction to hear the case.

The ferry corporation sued the Telecommunication Workers' Union for alleged unlawful picketing at Departure Bay near Nanaimo Jan. 2, 1978. The picketing lasted five hours and cancelled some ferry sailings.

Justice George Murray said cancellations undoubtedly caused damage to the corporation and the corporation alleged it was carried out in pursuit of an unlawful conspiracy.

However, the union said the court has no jurisdiction under the Labor Code of B.C. which provides that a court may award damages for conduct contravening the code if the provincial labor relations board has determined that the conduct was wrong and consented to proceed to recover damages.

Rail layoffs cut, strike still on?

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Railway has reduced planned layoffs but the action has not lessened strike threats by 2,200 unionized employees.

B.C. Rail announced Wednesday it had completed a review of the layoffs, as promised the Council of Railway Unions last Saturday, and reduced them to 47 members of the permanent staff. The company said 23 temporary maintenance-of-way employees would be laid off two weeks early.

Only 10 workers are to be laid off at the Crown corporation's boxcar plant in Squamish where 80 workers were to have been laid off.

However Norm Farley, chairman of the union council, says no layoffs are acceptable.

He said union representatives will meet with B.C. Rail and, depending on results of those meetings, the union might cancel its plans to strike Friday.

"As far as I'm concerned, nothing has changed," said Farley. "We are not going to just turn around and accept their position.

"We do not intend to back off on this one. There's a good possibility they (B.C. Rail) are going to get into trouble."

Farley said three men lost $3,000 each after moving their families to Vancouver following company promises of permanent jobs. Now they are out of work.

B.C. Rail spokesman Hugh Armstrong said several men were hired from Eastern Canada several days ago.

"It's a most unfortunate situation but we cannot predict economic swings. Last in is the first out."

Ladner said the number of layoffs was reduced by reorganizing the set-up for repairs. There will be cutbacks in major repairs, but they won't be eliminated, he said.

6,000 'lost' papers found

VANCOUVER (CP) — Concern over the loss by Statistics Canada of 6,000 documents dealing with the criminal records of British Columbians ended Wednesday when the records turned up almost exactly where they were supposed to be.

"The 400 cartons were within a few feet of where they were supposed to be, covered by a lot of other papers," said Lorne Rowebottom, a spokesman for Statistics Canada in Ottawa.

"We don't know how it could have happened. They were completely overlooked all the time we were hunting for them."

The cartons, first reported missing about two weeks ago, contained forms listing case histories, charges and sentences of adults who appeared in B.C. courts last year. They had been sent to Ottawa so Statistics Canada could prepare a profile of those accused of committing criminal offences in the province.

"The whole thing is very embarassing," said Rowebottom. "It must be blamed on a shortage of space."

Costliest storm

PASCAGOULA, Miss. (UPI) — Hurricane Frederic was the most costly storm ever to hit the United States, insurance adjusters say. Early estimates put insured losses at above $175 million for the Mississippi Gulf Coast and above $750 million for Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

be assessed this tax," administrative manager Rob Weston said.

Tindall said that although there is a slight increase in the gasoline surcharge from 3 cents a gallon, everything else is good news.

The hydro surcharge was first suggested at $1.50 a month, but under the new formula, it will be slightly less than $3 a year.

The government's offer to pick up 75 per cent of any deficit for the first two years and then 70 per cent in the third year is unchanged.

But back in February, the government had said it would pick up 65 per cent of any deficit in the fourth year and 60 per cent in the fifth year.

The new proposal to pick up 66⅔ per cent in the fourth and fifth years is a decided plus, Tindall said.

Glazier agreed, saying the new percentages would mean an extra $600,000 for the district by the fifth year. He was also pleased that the gas tax and electricity surcharge were not fixed, as they were in the first proposed agreement.

The whole issue of transit costs in Victoria has been on the shelf since the GVRD balked at the first suggested cost-sharing formula.

The formula had to be agreed to by both regional districts, as there will be the transfer of capital assets, and this must take place simultaneously in both cities.

Mayor Couvelier said it's expected the gasoline tax and the electricity surcharge will handle the CRD's share of the deficit for the next five years.

"I'm extremely pleased the GVRD has finally come up with a formula which will have beneficial effects for the Capital Region District."

Glazier said the new agreement covers all the objections the CRD had raised in the first proposal, and he intends recommending acceptance of the new proposal at the next regular CRD meeting next Wednesday.

ment they signed was to operate a joint tank farm. There was no discussion on sites.

Dowell's claim that they had signed an option on up-Island property is erroneous, Wheaton said.

Both Duke and Glazier said Dowell's statement was harmful to present negotiations.

Said Duke: "No options have been signed. No site decision has been made and it almost certainly won't be made before 1980."

Duke said the companies are looking at several sites and are also considering Bamberton and Hatch Point, near Mill Bay.

It would not be possible to supply gas and furnace oil to Victoria from Nanaimo because the cost of transporting furnace oil from Nanaimo to Victoria would be six cents a gallon, he said,

Duke said the cost of transporting gas might be a bit less but would still be still expensive.

In addition, he said, there would be dangers involved in transporting gas on the highway.

At city hall, council's economic development committee today approved a motion urging the CRD to again try to find a solution that would keept the tanks within the CRD's boundaries.

This small surplus compares with surpluses of more than $250 million in a single month at the beginning of the year.

Most economists are warning that the worst is to come. With the U.S. moving ever deeper into what now appears to be a prolonged recession, sales prospects in that country, which buys 70 per cent of Canada's exports, are likely to deteriorate.

Statistics Canada said motor vehicle exports were down 16 per cent during August, international sales of aircraft and other transportation equipment dropped by 20 per cent and exports of food and beverages were down 18 per cent.

The only major exports which continued to show growth were fabricated metals, petroleum and coal, chemicals, lumber and newsprint.

Canadians increased their foreign buying of most products, but notable increases were reported for industrial and agricultural machinery, clothing, crude oil and coal.

If Crosbie's forecast of a $2-billion trade surplus turns out to be too optimistic, revisions would have to made in a whole set of economic assumptions on which the government now is operating.

The Conservatives were counting on a $2-billion trade surplus to offset the more than $9-billion shortfall expected in the service account with other nations. This includes interest and dividend payments abroad, foreign travel, business fees flowing outside the country and dozens of other miscellaneous flows of funds out of the country.

By Crosbie's calculations, this would leave Canada with a deficit of $7 billion in its international account.

He has complained repeatedly that the magnitude of this deficit is one of his most serious concerns and a severe constraint in policy-making.

Gold tumbles

buy it at $400," said Morton Rom, a gold analyst at Mocatta Metals, one of the world's major bullion trading houses.

But the nerves of many of the recent buyers cracked Tuesday after Treasury Undersecretary Anthony Solomon warned that the U.S. could increase its gold sales, now at 750,000 ounces a month, to undermine the price of bullion by increasing the supply.

"You could bring about a very substantial price correction, depending on how big (government) sales were," Solomon said. This statement was quickly distributed around the world by news organizations and within minutes the price of gold plummeted $39 to as low as $405 in London.

The price came back, only to plunge again when it was reported the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Paul Volcker, unexpectedly left a conference of the International Monetary Fund in Belgrade, Yugoslavia. Traders feared Volcker was returning to Washington to do what Solomon had hinted.

"That scared the hell out of the gold market," said Jeffrey Nichols, a gold analyst at Argus Research Corp. in New York.

"At the bottom of the fantastic rise has been legitimate concern over the future of the world's economies," said Nichols, who thinks the price now is far above any level that could be justified by such concerns.

"The market is not being entirely sane," he said. "Insanity exhibits itself in strange ways, including these large swings in the market."

The Rock: Under siege but holding

By NORMAN GIDNEY

There's a cherry tree behind the window, growing through what would have been somebody's living room if Albert Atkins had ever got around to finishing his apartment building.

But he suffered a stroke 10 years ago and died this spring in his 80s, leaving the Beaconville Apartments with nine of the 15 suites originally planned habitable.

It sits on a high chunk of rock at the triangle formed by Douglas and Blanshard, looking like a battleship about to steam into Beacon Hill park.

Like the rock it sits on, the Beaconville is solid. Double reinforced concrete forms the walls and the stairs. Even the flower boxes are concrete several inches thick. At city hall they say Atkins worked in the old country style and built to last.

"It's built like a bunker. It's like Gibraltar," said deputy city planner Peter Crisp.

There have been periodic campaigns at city hall to get the building cleaned up — the city is again about to issue an order to the present owners to repair it or tear it down — but the Beaconville has resisted stronger attacks in the past.

The people who live there like her.

"The suites are furnished — nice and big, a lot better than the place I am in now, to tell the truth," said Mrs. Cecile Whitehead, who was caretaker and looked after the Atkins for seven years.

"The outside isn't that well but the inside is very nice," said Cathy Walsh, who recently moved in.

Being close to town and just a stone's throw from the park make it a desirable place to live, she said.

Another tenant told the Times she paid $200 a month for her one-bedroom furnished apartment, comparable with prevailing rents for the area.

"It would be nice if they renovated, though," she added.

There would have been more room if suites planned for the south side — the large circular glassed area at the apex of the triangle — were finished, she said.

A man helping to clear out the Atkins' suite for new tenants on Tuesday said the Beaconville's tenants "like it very, very much — some don't want to move."

Rev. Melville Dobson, former pastor of Belmont Avenue United Church, lived there for 14 years until he moved out this year for health reasons.

"The Atkins were good to him. They were fine people," said a Dobson friend.

Peter Hartnell owns the Queen Victoria Inn next door and has some strong opinions about the building, although he had a soft spot for Atkins.

He says a number of rooms in his hotel are "lame duck" — that is when people see the view out over "that bloody bunch of garbage, that junk heap" they demand another room or a discount.

Atkins worked on the place continually. He'd bring sand and gravel home in his car and mix cement on the sidewalk.

"Even when he got crippled with arthritis he'd be out fooling around with it."

Though Hartnell and the city would be happy to see the building go, the Beaconville may outlive its builder for years to come. One reason: it's well built.

"You'd have to go in with dynamite," said planner Crisp.

And it would be difficult to do anything else with the property.

Hartnell had an architect look at the building with a view to incorporating it with his hotel but was advised against it.

The owners of Helm's Inn around the corner on Michigan, who have an option to buy Beaconville, tried to interest him in a swap — Beaconville for Hartnell's Thunderbird Motel across the street next to Helm's Inn — but he declined.

The building's present status is uncertain. The tax man thinks the apartment building itself is practically worthless. The 1979 provincial assessment put a market value of only $13,400 on the building but was valued the property at more than 10 times that amount — $154,300.

It is still tied up in probate. Mrs. Atkins is in a rest home now and Canada Trust, the executor of Atkins' estate, says it won't violate the confidentiality of its trust arrangement.

One man who remembers Atkins with fondness suggests the Beaconville, with its curving staircases and interesting details, "is almost worth saving as a folly — but not quite.

"It was quite an imaginative thing," architect John Wade said Wednesday reminiscing about the old man.

In 1946 he hired him as a site supervisor for his business shortly after Atkins had been released from the Japanese prisoner-of-war camp at Changi in Hong Kong. Atkins had worked before the war for Shell Oil in Asia.

"He was a marvellous old man. He physically did a lot of the construction, although he had Commonwealth Construction at the beginning. He was a very independent fellow — didn't want help."

Dowell backs off

Ald. Shirley Dowell of Oak Bay has decided against trying for the mayor's job because she doesn't think she can win a three-way race.

Ald. Doug Watts and former alderman John Goult are candidates for mayor in the November election.

"I have to be practical and realize that I cannot win a three-way race," Dowell said.

She said she supports a full-time mayor now that Oak Bay has a $14 million budget.

"Neither of the candidates running can give the job the time it really requires," she said.

Dowell still has a year to go in her aldermanic term and expects to remain with the Capital Regonal District as Oak Bay director no matter which candidate wins.

KEY VOTE TONIGHT

Prentice won't bail out despite new setback

Royal Jubilee Hospital chairman Terry Prentice again refused to budge Wednesday night despite another vote of non-confidence in his leadership at a sometimes stormy annual meeting of the hospital society.

With 42 paid-up members present, the vote was 22-15 in favor of a motion proposed by Dr. Scott Wallace and Dr. D.A. Baird which criticized Prentice's "unsatisfactory and inadequate" performance. (See also page 30).

Four members of his own board — Oak Bay Ald. Peter Bunn, RJH chief of staff Dr. Elinor Powell, Mrs. G.B. McKay and Margaret McClung — deserted him.

The vote followed a unanimous vote of non-confidence two weeks ago by a meeting of 120 doctors on the Jubilee medical staff, which totals 160, and a summer during which there have been several calls for Prentice's resignation.

Remarks about unnecessary surgery supposed to have been made by Prentice on several occasions in the last three months are what sparked the leadership crisis, and they were again the main issue at the meeting Wednesday night.

PRENTICE

. . . up to the board

But Prentice told reporters after the meeting: "I don't think there's a need to resign."

He told the meeting the 13-member board elected him chairman and would decide his fate. The board meets tonight in a special meeting to consider its own motion of non-confidence but passage seems highly unlikely.

Prentice is determined to stay on and he has the votes to back him up.

Fire chief Eric Simmons who is vice-chairman, Empress manager Ted Balderson, former Saanich alderman Joe Bourque, provincial appointee Clare White and society nominee John Winter voted against the non-confidence motion at the annual meeting. Prentice himself didn't vote, although he can.

Three board members are out of town — Royal Bank regional manager Roger Hemeon, a city of Victoria appointee, Royal Canadian Legion appointee Norman Allan and provincial nominee Gwerysl Richards — meaning tonight's motion should fail by the same 5-4 margin, with Prentice again abstaining. The issue will finally be resolved at the annual board elections later this month.

Much of the meeting was devoted to what Prentice said in the past, and he tried to smooth relations with the doctors with a short slide show illustrating the pressures and constraints which act on the board of directors in trying to ensure adequate and safe health care on a tight budget.

Dr. Wallace said Prentice insulted doctors with his remarks in the press and to a meeting of medical staff in July.

The chairman told the Times July 3: "The real solution to our problem is for fewer people to get sick. If people would live better they wouldn't get sick so often."

But he denied remarks attributed to him about doctors scheduling unnecessary surgery. Wallace got mad and said people had died while on the waiting list for surgery at the Jubilee and he had a cardiac patient now paralysed down one side and unable to speak because he couldn't get an operation scheduled soon enough.

"I said we would operate the hospital as efficiently as we could. But I knew at the time we were over budget last year and over budget this year, but I said we would try and that's what we did," Prentice said.

Medical staff and hospital society members seem to want a crusader to take on the provincial government in the current financial crunch, but Prentice won't play the part.

"I'm not going to go out and make charging statements in the press just to make political arguments with the government. That's not the way I'm going to operate. We've got to go down and convince the paying agency which is the provincial government and convince them we need more money," said Prentice.

"What you're saying tonight is not what you said on July 19 (at the doctors' meeting)," said Wallace. "You have a facility for leaving a variety of impressions."

"You presented yourself as the advocate of government — you had only so many dollars and if various people can't be treated then that's tough luck on those people."

Doctors weren't upset because of self-interest or a sensational report in the press, he said, but because the reports by hospital staff document with hard facts that "this hospital is so sadly depleted of staff and facilities that you only get in an emergency. This hospital is operating very close to the margin.

"I hope we can get the message across at this eleventh hour."

June Jarvie doesn't apologize any more

"It's strange that this is the one handicap you're always apologizing for — I'm sorry. Pardon me. You always feel quilty about it — as though you've done something wrong. Except I don't apologize any more."

June Jarvie stopped apologizing for her severe hearing impairment after she joined the Hard of Hearing Club of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute.

Her life has changed dramatically because of the opportunity to communicate with other hard-of-hearing people.

She sits in her pleasant living room, concentrating on lip reading and trying to communicate what it felt like to emerge from a world of silence.

"I tried to hide it. I wouldn't tell people I couldn't hear them. They thought I was stuck up and unfriendly. When I first had a hearing aid, I would wind my hair around it to disguise it. I was withdrawn and completely isolated through school. I couldn't call anybody a real friend," she says.

"In the two years since I joined the club, I've completely turned around. I've opened up to people."

Her son pipes in with a comment:

"She's really come out of her shell. Father and I both noticed it. It made a difference to us too. She changed so much — even physically," says 20-year-old Nick.

"Yes, who would have thought that behind that cold exterior was a friendly little fellow trying to get out," she adds, laughing.

There are about 200 members of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute in Victoria. Almost one out of five people in this city has some hearing impairment. The proportion nationally is one out of 10.

The institute provides office space for a counsellor from the Western Institute for the Deaf, who helps with job placements, communication on the job, and other problems.

It provides interpreter services for people who have to appear in court or deal with the government.

It acts as a message centre for hard-of-hearing people who use teletypewriters.

It provides equipment for the hard of hearing to know when the phone is ringing or the baby is crying, information to parents, teachers, and health care groups, lip-reading classes, and prevention.

This year for the first time the institute is among the 23 agencies seeking funds through the United Way appeal. The grant is not large — $9,500 — but enough to keep the office and services going.

The money may enable them to open a drop-in centre for hard-of-hearing people who are afraid to drive or go out at night.

"The hard of hearing mostly need socializing. It's a self-help group. They just blossom," says Mrs. Jarvie.

She blossomed. But she can still hear the taunts from the past.

"In Grade 1 I can remember a gang of kids surrounding me yelling 'Junie's deaf and dumb. Nyah nyah nyah.' That's never left me. I can hear it now."

Youth dragging before fatal crash

A 17-year-old youth killed in a head-on collision that claimed three other lives was drag-racing just moments before he lost control of his vehicle.

A coroner's jury made the finding Wednesday night at the conclusion of an inquest into the deaths of Michael Patrick Weldam, 17, of Florence Lake Road, and the occupants of the other car.

The other victims were Nicholas John Christophers, 64, and his wife Lidia Josefa, 56, of 1370 Beach, and her sister Fern Jeanette Christophers, 71, of Winfield.

The jury said Weldam lost control of his car while rounding a curve in the road and crossed the double line into the path of the Christophers' vehicle.

They said Weldam's car was travelling more than 140 km/h at the time and noted he had been racing down the highway with another vehicle just moments prior.

Colwood RCMP said charges are now being contemplated against the 16-year-old girl driver of the vehicle involved in the drag race.

EXPOS! Quebec's prescription for unity

With all the interest that was generated nationally by the Montreal Expos in their National League East pennnant race, is there any doubt now that facilities for baseball won't be a must in any plans for Vancouver's proposed new stadium.

Of course not — if Bill Bennett ever gets out of the bull pen.

But those EXPOS! The name not only had Montreal in a tizzy the past while, but the entire country got the message too. And who should be worried about a unity crisis after what all those Yankees did for the nation?

There was more interest here than ever before in a Major League pennant race and even the dear old CBC got in the act and gave the fans what they wanted. When did that happen before? And a "thank you" from all of us.

More logically, perhaps, the Expos went over the two-million mark in attendance for the first time and that put them in select company with Los Angeles, Philadelphia, New York Yankees, California, Cincinnati, Boston and Kansas City. And, as might be noted, there were many major U.S. cities missing from that list.

Yes, the Expos came up big many ways. They totalled more than 700,000 fans more than in their previous best year, 1977; set a single game mark of 59,000-plus and a two-game series mark of 108,000; and, if they'd gotten to the NL final . . . but whoa there boy.

They were big business as well. Their total revenue this year may hit $12 million, which is more than double what the club generated in its first season, 1969. In addition to concessions, et al, here are some of the other reasons why.

There are two huge electronic scoreboards in the stadium, each worth approximately $1 million, that offer 16 minutes of advertising time per game. The tab was $5,115 for a 15-second spot, $8,470 for 30 seconds, $12,650 for 60 seconds; and, as with the price of gold, look for that to jump next season.

In addition, there are 34 color panels at $12,500-$20,000, depending on location, etc., plus advertising panels for each of the stadium's concession stands at $10,000-$20,000 per.

Also as there is no roof on Olympic Stadium — yet — that minor detail was also taken care of, profitably. A bus company, Voyageur Colonial Ltd., had its name emblazoned in huge blue letters across the bright, yellow tarp that covered the infield during rain delays.

There were fan amenities of course, such as that modern Olympic stadium, which wasn't there when it all started; those electronic scoreboards, a part and parcel of all major league parks; an organist, the choreographer of any production; and Youppi.

Yes, Youppi. he is the club mascot and one of the new breed that has taken a place in more sports than baseball.

Attired in an outlandish orange costune replete with Expo shirt and hat, it is Youppi's job to be a centre of attention. He leads the cheering from on top of the club's dugout and at times from a seat in the stands. When the team's winning, he looks great. But when it's losing . . . can he hit?

Or, as today's saying of that new cast might go:

When they are good,
they can be very, very good;
but when they are bad,
they are horrid!

Still, the Expos seemingly have it made, even if they didn't quite make it to the National League playoff. With the nucleus of a good, young club — the average age is 25 — things should only get better.

On the other hand, baseball is an unpredictable business at best and there are always those unadvertised surprises. Already some players are demanding their rights, such as saying "play me or trade me", requesting a raise or threatening to take their talents on the open market; and the guy with the great curve ball today may find he's throwing a blooper next April.

But these are the norm. Suffice to add there appears sufficient good reason for continued optimism.

But to all, especially the owners (Charles Bronfman is chairman and 45 per cent owner as well as being chairman of the executive committee of Seagram Ltd.), the facts are plain to see.

Having a contender is all that really counts, isn't it?

Gee! But think of it. In Vancouver we could watch Crazy George. If he's not retired by then.

CAHA looking travel funds

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is desperately searching for $40,000 to sponsor an entry to the 1979 world junior championships in Helsinki, board chairman Frank McKinnon said Wednesday.

"We're looking for federal government support but if that fails we'll have to look elsewhere," McKinnon said. "But whether we can come up with that kind of bread, I don't know."

The CAHA had decided not to enter the December tournament because the major junior leagues, which supply the players, were in a turmoil this summer over under-age players being drafted by the National League.

Junior owners were also waiting to see how many juniors would be lost to the Olympic hockey program, now gearing up for the Winter Games at Lake Placid.

But most of the underage juniors drafted by NHL teams have returned and university players form the bulk of the Olympic squad, McKinnon said.

When Finland pleaded with Canada in Amsterdam at a recent meeting of the International Ice Hockey Federation to send a team, the CAHA changed its mind.

"We just made the decision," McKinnon said. "We had not budgeted for it, nor had the government."

Lou Lefaive, director-general of Sport Canada, said he will discuss the matter with Sport Minister Steve Paproski as soon as he receives a formal CAHA request.

Sport Canada, the federal agency responsible for assisting amateur sport, provided $41,000 last year to help send New Westminster Bruins to Sweden.

McKinnon said the makeup of the team that would go to Finland has not been decided although owner-coach Ernie (Punch) McLean has volunteered to have his Bruins form the basis of Canada's entry.

CONTROVERSIAL CALL on line drive hit by Phil Garner of Pittsburgh Pirates and apparently caught by right fielder Dave Collins of Cincinnati Reds, above, touched off rhubarb in fifth inning of National League baseball playoff game in Cincinnati Wednesday. Former Montreal fan sparks Boston victory

By Canadian Press

Rookie defenceman Ray Bourque grew up cheering for the Canadiens in his native Montreal, but now, at 18, he's happy to be with Boston Bruins.

"Boston is a great team and I'm happy to be with Boston," the 18-year-old Bourque said Wednesday after breaking away in the second period for a short-handed goal which lifted the Bruins to a 3-2 victory over Montreal in a National Hockey League exhibition.

Bourque, compared favorably by many observers with former Boston super star Bobby Orr at the same stage, was the Bruins' No. 1 draft pick this year after starring for Verdun in the Quebec Junior League.

"It's great to score a winning goal any time, but this was against a team from where I lived all my life," Bourque said. "I saw them play all the time. But, no, I didn't hope that Montreal would draft me. With Canadiens, you have to spend a few years in the minors. With Boston, I am getting a chance to stay."

In other games, Vancouver Canucks ended a three-game losing streak by defeating Winnipeg Jets 3-1, Toronto Maple Leafs blanked Chicago Black Hawks 5-0, Minnesota North Stars beat Edmonton Oilers 6-4, Washington Capitals edged Philadelphia Flyers 4-3, New York Islanders downd Quebec Nordiques 6-2, Atlanta Flames beat the U.S. Olympic team 6-1, St. Louis Blues nipped Pittsburgh Penguins 3-2 and Los Angels Kings tied 5-5 with Colorado Rockies.

Defenceman Kevin McCarthy set up all three goals to lead Vancouver over Winnipeg.

Jets took a 1-0 lead on a power play goal by Lorne Stammler midway through the first period but Don Lever tied the game before the period ended.

Lever and Ron Sedlebauer scored in the third period to give the Canucks their second win in seven games.

Mike Palmateer and Jiri Crha combined for Toronto's first shutout of the exhibition season, turning aside 16 shots in beating the Black Hawks.

Bucs escape with big lead

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pittsburgh Pirates took home a 2-0 lead in the best-of-five National League championship series with the Reds, but players on both sides agreed the playoffs could just as easily stand at a game apiece — or 2-0 for Cincinnati.

The Pirates escaped with a 3-2 victory in 10 innings Wednesday, aided by a controversial call on a fielding play that set up a Pittsburgh score in the fifth inning.

Second-base umpire Frank Pulli ruled that a ball hit by Pirates shortstop Phil Garner touched the turf before right fielder Dave Collins reached it with a sliding catch.

"I did make the catch," insisted Collins, who argued his case with Pulli. "I said: 'If I hadn't caught the ball, I wouldn't have come up showing it to you.' "

"I saw the play all the way," countered Pulli. "There was no doubt about it. It's either catch or no catch, forget about the trap."

Garner went to second on a sacrifice and scored what at that time was the go-ahead run on a double by Tim Foli.

"Every game seems to be like this," sighed Foli, who had singled andscored Pittsburgh's first run. Dave Parker supplied the winning run with a single in the 10th inning.

Nobody has ever lost the first two playoff games and won the series, but the Reds said they would come back.

"We'll be the first club to do it," Collins predicted. "I believe it can be done."

"We got our backs to the wall, but we'll just go out and play the game," said Ray Knight. "This game can change instantly as long as you keep from getting down on yourself."

Cincinnati owned the Pirates in Pittsburgh during the regular season, winning five of the six games there, including a three-game sweep just after the all-star break.

"That was the turning point in our season," said Johnny Bench. "If there's going to be a turning point again, it better happen in Pittsburgh."

The Reds scored a run in the second inning on singles by Dan Driessen and Ray Knight and a sacrifice fly by pitcher Frank Pastore.

Cincinnati tied it in the ninth on consecutive doubles by pinch-hitter Heity Cruz and Collins.

With the score tied, one out and two men on base, Don Robinson came in to shut off the Reds by striking out Dave Concepcion and getting George Foster to ground out to second base.

The Reds used four pitchers, with reliever Doug Bair getting the loss. Robinson, the sixth and final Pittsburgh pitcher, was the winner.

"Beating the Reds at Riverfront Stadium has been one of the goals of my life," said Robinson, who grew up near here. "I grew up a Reds fan. It was Reds all the way until the Pirates drafted me."

Mike LaCoss, 14-8 during the regular season, was expected to start for Cincinnati in the third game of the series Friday. Tanner said Bert Blyleven, 12-5, would start for the Pirates as they attempt to secure a World Series berth.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Baltimore Orioles, who tend to finish their games with a flourish, can't be accused of starting slowly in post-season competition.

When John Lowenstein hit a two-out, 10th-inning pinch homer to give Baltimore a 6-3 victory over California Angels on Wednesday night, it marked the Orioles' 37th late-inning comeback triumph of the season.

It gave Baltimore a 1-0 lead in the best-of-five American League championship series while extending to 10 the Orioles' string of first-game victories in playoff and World Series baseball action.

The series continued here today with 23-game winner Mike Flanagan pitching for the Orioles against 16-game winner Dave Frost.

"When they open the door for us, we're going to step through," said Doug DeCinces, who singled to launch the winning rally. "That's one of the things that has made us successful all year. A team can't let up against us for a minute or we'll find a way to beat them."

Lowenstein, used sparingly after severely spraining his left ankle on Aug. 9, batted for Mark Belanger after California manager Jim Fregosi ordered an intentional walk to Al Bumbry.

In his first appearance in post-season play, Lowenstein hit the first pinch homer in AL playoff history. During the regular season, he hit 11 homers and drove in 34 runs in 197 times at bat.

On an 0-2 pitch from reliever John Montague, the left-handed batting Lowenstein sliced an opposite-field drive that barely reached the bleacher seats near the foul pole.

"I think the last time I hit a home run to left field was in 1958 in the Little League," Lowenstein joked after returning to the field for a curtain call requested by a record Baltimore playoff crowd of 52,787.

Montague came in at the start of the eighth after starter Nolan Ryan developed cramps in his right calf. He said of his third consecutive forkball delivery: "I got this one up. It's a hazard of the pitch."

Lowenstein hit only .217 as a pinch-hitter during the regular season, with five hits and one run batted in. But manager Earl Weaver, who relies on even the most esoteric of statistics, noted that Lowenstein was one-for-one against Montague this season.

Fregosi said Montague didn't throw a bad pitch, but that a stiff wind had blown the ball back into fair territory.

The California manager also contended that second baseman Bobby Grich had misjudged a pop fly by DeCinces in the third, allowing DeCinces to reach second.

With that opening, the Orioles scored two unearned runs on a double by Rick Dempsey and a single by Belanger.

The two runs offset the pair driven in by California's Dan Ford on a first-inning homer and a third-inning double.

The Orioles went ahead 3-2 on a fourth-inning sacrifice fly by DeCinces, but the Angels pulled even in the sixth on a run-scoring double by Grich.

Ryan, with a 5-13 record against Baltimore, struck out five of the first six batters he faced and tied a major-league playoff record by fanning the first four.

'Stacking' disturbs minor bodies

The executives of four Vancouver Island minor hockey associations met in Duncan Wednesday to discuss ways of stopping the drain of good young hockey players to the Victoria area and rival teams.

The outcome may be the formation of the Cowichan Valley Rep Association, which would singularly represent the associations involved — Kerry Park, Fuller Lake and Duncan and Lake Cowichan.

What concerns the associations is the practice of "stacking."

Stacking involves a team bringing in talented youngsters from outside its normal neighborhood, a practice banned under Canadian Amateur Hockey Association (CAHA) rules and usually not considered in the best interests of the game.

The specific case that brought the issue to the boiling point was the signing of three boys — from Nanaimo, Mill Bay and Chemainus — to the Racquet Club's midget team.

Midgets are 15 and 16 years old.

Because the Racquet Club is private, it was given the right years ago to recruit players from all over the Island.

If an association refuses to release a player to the Racquet Club, the club can claim the player under a quota rule which allows it to take three players from anywhere in the South Vancouver Island Hockey Association — but only one from each age division.

Although the matter has not formally come to the attention of the B.C. Amateur Hockey Association, officials are keeping a wary eye on the situation.

The three boys involved in the current dispute now are reportedly registered at Mt. Douglas secondary and are boarded out in Gordon Head homes. It is believed their parents have become Racquet Club members.

Judy Nikirk, president of the Kerry Park Minor Hockey Association, admits she's new to the game. She was elected in April and took over in May.

"When the transfers started coming in in August, I was shocked," she said.

She feels that one youngster the Racquet Club took from Kerry Park would have been grabbed anyway under the quota rule so he was released reluctantly by Kerry Park.

She also accuses neighboring Fuller Lake of recruiting the best from rival mid-Island associations.

"If we don't stop this, the smaller teams won't have any good players left," Nikirk said.

Because of its unique status, the Racquet Club is the only team that casts over such a wide area in search of players.

"It's privately owned, while all the other arenas are government operated," Nikirk said.

She charges the Racquet Club is even checking players at the bantam and peewee level to ensure better teams in the future, but emphasizes the major problem is at the midget level.

"We've lost 11 boys in a year and a half," she said. If we keep losing that number each and every season, we won't have any good players left.

"A rink can't operate with just four or five house teams. We've got to have these other teams coming in."

Nikirk said she believes a youngster should stay with the team nearest his home.

She said the Kerry Park arena was built five years ago, and at first, there were few good players.

"But all of a sudden we've got these good players and everybody wants them," she said.

Pat Rogers, chairman of hockey for the Racquet Club, said only he wants to find out more about the situation before commenting.

Scrum halves disagree but it was a good tour

Max Low

England in the fall — and France, too, for that matter — might well be glorious and provide the sort of leafy scenes that for years have sent poets and songwriters into rapture. All they did for our scrum halves, though, was send them to hospital!

Neither country was too kind to Canada's scrum halves (traditionally the smallest men on a rugby squad) during the just-ended national team tour to Europe. But it wasn't always the host players who were at fault.

Preston Wiley, the UBC scrum half from Vancouver, broke a bone in his foot, practicing for one of the four matches in England and was unable to play again.

Canada's No.2 scrum half, Dennis Quigley who's also from Vancouver, took over but in the last game of the tour (against France "A" in Paris) he broke a bone in his finger.

Young Cowichan scrum half Ted Zinkan, flown over as a substitute when Wiley was hurt, wasn't much luckier. At least he wasn't injured, but he did travel all that way without even having a game!

Ted thought he was going to make it onto the field in the match against France and coach Bruce Howe of UVic had him warming up on the sideline when Quigley was hurt but Dennis played on for the rest of the game, broken finger and all.

On-tour practice sessions generally weren't very happy occasions for the Canadian players.

Winger Chuck Shergold of Victoria tore a hamstring in his very first practice on the first day of the trip. He missed the first three games and then, halfway through Canada's fourth match and his only outing, Chuck attempted a centre-kick and tore it badly again.

"He flew home after that," coach Howe said when he and the rest of the team arrived back. "He was hobbling around on crutches and decided it wasn't worth going on to France," he explained.

As well, centre Tony Bauer of Edmonton missed the last three games with a charley horse.

Next to injuries, the team's biggest problem, coach Howe admitted with a grin, was "excessive receptions."

"The hospitality was incredible," he said. "Some days there were two or even three receptions for us, which was all very nice but they become tiring when the boys are training hard. It's all a part of touring you have to accept, of course."

Despite the injuries and the receptions, the Canadian team took the field fit each time and performed well. Howe said he was satisfied with his players on almost every count.

Asked about the "almost", he said the goalkicking could have been better and the Canadians showed they still need to concentrate on scrumming to get this aspect of their game up to international standards.

The side did well, though, with three wins (15-6 over Somerset, 10-6 over Cornwall and 14-4 over France "B" at Lille), two defeats (19-8 by Cardiff and 34-15 by France "A") and one draw (6-6 with Southern Counties at Aylesbury).

Canada actually kept the game against France "A" a lot closer than the score showed, said the coach.

"We were down 13-0 at half time and played really well in the second half to get within seven points at 22-15 but, with five minutes to go, we were trying to attack from our own 25 and twice had passes intercepted for cheap tries."

Howe felt that Canada's best performance was the win over France "B", who rebounded from that defeat to beat England "B" last Saturday.

"We played well, too, against Somerset and in the second half against Cardiff," the coach pointed out. "With some more reliable goalkicking, we could have been very close to beating Cardiff."

The other Vancouver Islanders who played before crowds of 10,000 in both Cardiff and Paris and of around 3,000 or so at the remaining games, were Hans de Goede and Gary Grant (who Howe said were the star forwards on tour), Chris Fowler, Ron McInnes, Ray Rogers, Dennis Sinnott, Pat Trelawny and Dwaine Van Eeuwen.

Result-wise, the tour (which certainly had a powerful Vancouver Island connection with not only Howe coaching but Peter Clarke of Victoria doing a fine job as manager) was the most successful of any Canadian touring team.

"But more encouraging to me," said an obviously-pleased Howe, "was the tremendous support I got from all the players and the work they were prepared to put in for it both in preparation here and while they were away."

Home Lumber pulls ahead

RUZOMBEROK, Czechoslovakia — Victoria Home Lumber now has a 3-2 record in its eight-game, three-week tour of the Slovakian region of Czechoslovakia.

Home Lumber, the Canadian senior "A" women's champions, placed second in the ninth annual Ruzomberok tournament with a 2-1 record.

Bolstered by several top players from other parts of British Columbia, the Victoria squad opened with a 106-88 loss to Slovan of Bratislavia, the Czech champions, but came back with an 86-60 triumph over Dukla of Banska Bysterica and a 64-63 edge over the host SCP Ruzomberok squad.

Bev Bland of Vancouver topped Home Lumber with 18 points per game, Gail Klaver of Simon Fraser University dunked an average of 12 per game and Mary Coutts of Victoria averaged 11 per game and was selected to the all-star team.

The club plays two more games before returning home Sunday.

Southern Comfort leads CFSA race

Southern Comfort, skippered by Bill Sergeant, took first place in the fourth race of the Canadian Forces Sailing Association's fall series.

Second place went to Gjoa, skippered by Olaf Phyvold, and Doug Russel's Ithaqua finished third.

Next competition on the calendar will be the Royal Victoria Yacht Club's fall regatta, Oct. 13-14.

Posse dropped

VANCOUVER (CP) — Forward Derek Possee, 33, has become a free agent after being placed on termination waivers by Vancouver Whitecaps after playing three seasons with the North American Soccer League club.

Docherty detained in probe

LONDON (AP) — Former Derby County soccer manager Tommy Docherty was detained by police today and was to be interviewed by detectives investigating the affairs of his old club.

Docherty, now manager of Second Division Queen's Park Rangers, failed to turn up at a training session Thursday morning and a police spokesman said Docherty had been detained in connection with a current investigation.

It is understood that Docherty will be questioned about offences under the Prevention of Corruption Act.

Docherty, who has been living at the Kensington Hilton Hotel, was thought to have been taken to Derby, although his secretary denied all knowledge of his whereabouts.

Police have been investigating certain aspects of Derby County's administration for several months. Docherty, who had a number of dealings with North American Soccer League clubs while in charge, resigned as manager in May.

Howie's firm hand guiding Meston's

By JIM CRERAR

Any resemblance between Meston's Auto Body and the team that first played in Island soccer's premier division division 11 years ago is non-existant. Even the name has been changed.

Promoted to the Vancouver Island League first division this season after winning Division II, Meston's hasn't lost a game in three starts.

Mind you, the club hasn't won one either, but three ties in three outings isn't bad for a bunch of newcomers.

The latest saw-off came Wednesday night against favored UVic Vikings at Royal Athletic Park. It was scoreless and left Vikings alone atop the 10-team league, a point ahead of Canadian champion Vic West.

Meston's began in 1967 as a team of young Portuguese players with a barber shop as the sponsor. They called themselves the Mayfair Clippers and trimmed enough opponents to earn promotion to Division I in 1968.

Their first premier division game, a Jackson Cup match against Canadian Scottish, was a disaster. They lost 15-0.

They survived, though, and stayed at the top level for three seasons before being tossed out for disciplinary reasons.

This year's team is young but playing-coach Howie Anderson, 32, is a steadying influence. It was never more evident than Wednesday

Outplayed territorially, Meston's owed it all to the back line.

That may turn out to be the team's strong point because Anderson, coaching for the first time beyond the juvenile level, is a veteran of 13 seasons as a defender.

His credentials are impressive. He was Division I rookie of the year with Vic West after coming out of Oak Bay high, played several seasons with Victoria O'Keefes of the old Pacific Coast League, also did time with Victoria Regals and was on London Boxing Club's national championship team five years ago.

Anderson also came up with Wednesday night's best shot, a low drive early in the game that UVic goalie Ted Van Waes somehow punched aside.

Meston rookie Paul Pynn was particularly notable at left back, setting up a near-score in the second half and heading a dangerous shot out of goalkeeper Gord Reading's way late in the game. Backs Joe Frias and Salvi Scandale also were instrumental in keeping the Vikings at bay.

"We're a very young team," Anderson said afterwards. "I'm kind of hoping the players will adjust to the pace by Christmas, but they're surprising me so far."

Shooters get butt-end —Nattrass

EDMONTON (CP) — Canada's trapshooters are receiving unfair treatment from Sport Canada, says Susan Nattrass, world women's trapshooting champion on four occasions.

"There's no love lost between me and Sport Canada because they've been screwing me around all year," said Nattrass who is preparing for the world championships in Italy next week.

"I shouldn't have to worry about my monthly allowance — yet they're five months late."

Nattrass, 28, feels it's wrong that many coaches have their expenses paid to travel with track and field teams when shooting coaches don't.

She gives as an example the costs she and her mother, who has always coached her, face in travelling to international events.

"My mother has paid her own way to the world championships since 1969." It's part of a family affair, started when her father Floyd introduced her to the sport. He also was an international competitor.

"Mom's as good a coach as there is in Canada. She has four gold medals and a silver (from the world championships)."

Nattrass appeared in her first world championships in San Sebastian, Spain, in 1969. That was the year her father quit competitive shooting.

"I think a lot of people in track and field would quit if they weren't getting financial assistance. A lot of them are prima donnas.

"And I wonder how many skiers would continue to race if they weren't being helped so much?

Nattrass said she will continue to pay her own way to shoot against the best as she's done in the past. "They have me over a barrel. They know I love shooting and competing.

"I know that this year if my father hadn't been around I wouldn't have been able to go to a lot of competitions. I would have had to quit."

CART mans battle posts in continuing USAC fight

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Championship Auto Racing Teams Inc. showed Wednesday it was ready to battle the older U.S. Auto Club for a second year by announcing a 13-race schedule for 1980.

CART, formed late last year by race car owners who were unhappy with USAC's program for its top level of competition, also reorganized its operational structure for 1980.

Pat Patrick, a CART director who has served as the organization's president this year, was elected chairman of the board. James A. Melvin, currently CART's general manager, is the new president and chief operating officer.

The 1980 schedule includes two races each at Ontario, Calif., Trenton, N.J., Atlanta, Ga., Phoenix, Ariz., and Brookyln, Mich.

CART plans to add two new races to its schedule, one at Sears Point International Raceway in Sonoma, Calif., Oct. 12, 1980, and the other in Mexico City two weeks later.

The Indianapolis 500, championship auto racing's top event, is missing from the schedule announced by CART since it is sanctioned by USAC. Earlier this year, Indianapolis Motor Speedway officials announced that the 1980 500 would be an invitational race.

In 1979, USAC rejected the entries of seven CART teams for the Indy 500. However, they were able to participate after receiving a court order.

Legal disputes dominated activity leading up to the 1979 race after the qualifying attempts of several cars were disallowed. USAC disqualified the cars saying they had violated rules governing control of the boost an engine can receive from its pressure valve.

One of the entries placed in the race by court order, a Roger Penske-owned car driven by Rick Mears, won the 1979 race.

The 1980 schedule announced by CART begins March 2 in Phoenix. Other dates include March 9, Ontario; April 27, Atlanta; June 8, Trenton; July 20, Brooklyn, Mich.; Aug. 3, Watkins Glen, N.Y.; Aug. 17, Trenton; Aug. 31, Ontario.

CART's board established turbocharger pressure limits of 60 inches for 1980 for all engines other than the four-cylinder Offenhausers, which will be limited to 70 inches.

Snelling gets Calgary post

CALGARY (CP) — The University of Calgary has announced the appointment of Derek Snelling, who coached the Canadian swim team at the 1972 and 1976 Olympics, as swim coach beginning in September, 1980.

Snelling, who will complete contractual obligations at Toronto's Etobicoke Swim Club before reporting to Calgary, will coach a combined program of swimmers from the university and the city's Foothills Swim Club.

"Each club will exist in its own right," said physical education dean Roger Jackson. "We don't want to destroy the Foothills Club but want to combine resources and facilities to produce top-notch swimmers.

Snelling, who coached Etobicoke to the 1979 Canadian club championship, declared his intention of producing a world-class team.

"Having won so many years, I believe the reason is that I'm doing today what other coaches will be doing a year from now," he said. "With the joining of the community and the university no one will be able to compete with us nationally and hopefully in the world."

Liverpool again exits quickly

Times News Services

Liverpool, European club champions in 1977 and 1978, fell at the first hurdle for the second successive season, when it slumped to a 4-2 aggregate defeat against Soviet soccer champions Dinamo Tblisi in Georgia on Wednesday.

Last season Liverpool lost to English rivals Nottingham Forest in the first round of the European Cup, with Forest going to grab Europe's major club prize.

Two weeks ago Liverpool struggled to beat Tbilisi 2-1 in England. Wednesday the Soviet side, stunning the English club with its flair and skill, triumphed 3-0.

Only a brilliant first half display by England international goalkeeper Ray Clemence kept a rampant Tbilisi at bay, but Clemence was left helpless in the second half as his fellow defenders crumbled in the face of unremitting pressure.

Over 100 teams were playing Wednesday, in European Cup, Cup Winners Cup and European Football Union (UEFA) Cup first round, second leg ties.

Quantity and quality due for thoroughbred meeting

By BILL WALKER

Horses, plenty of them. That's the early line on the Capital City Turf Club's 16-day thoroughbred racing program set to begin at Sandown Park Oct. 17.

Applications already have been received for nearly all the available 290 stall spaces while several other runners, perhaps 50 or more, will commute from the mainland as in past years.

Some of the runners coming are a little out of the ordinary and on the whole better than to appear here in past years, says racing secretary Aubrey Davies.

CCTC president George Harknett is extremely pleased with the reception the meet has received from mainland horsemen and also Island horseman and horse players.

"I have found a lot of interest in the meeting," he said, "and, if the weather cooperates, I believe we should have an excellent meet."

"The quality of the horses coming and the numbers are encouraging indeed," he added. "They make the meeting."

As for those runners, Harknett and Ray Bryant, who jointly own the highly-regarded Jet Sailor, a runner in the recent B.C. Derby, may not have it all their own way in some of the feature events such as the Island derby as at first had been suggested.

Reason is that Power Cell, the smart three-year old which last Friday defeated Jet Sailor and Fraser McColl's Garfield in a 6½ furlong sprint, has been added to a long list of horses released by Davies as being Sandown bound.

In addition, there are several other better-known horses which should provide good competition in the handicap and allowance events.

They include: On Your Way, Royal Casements, Rustling Note, Royal Pazzaz, Lord Hubert, Haigs Gesture, Village Flyer, Never Charges Jr., Pertock.

And, on the distaff side, Win A Share, Devilry, Anikrisava, Boundary Girl, Diving Girl, Problem Solved, Eagle Gamest and Amos The Famous are some names to ponder over the next two weeks.

Leading Ex-Park trainer Wayne Isbister of Victoria is bringing over 19 head while veteran Jim Halket will be bringing over Ole Par, Hustling Knight, Sassie Driver, Franshot and Mr. Griff.

Trainer Don Morison, who handles Power Cell, will also be bringing Fleet Navaho and Ask The Fleet and Ken O'Connell will have Tenalta, Citizens Award. Our Boy Kirk, Victorious Runner, Future Reference, Wee Falori and Art of Persuasion in his stable.

Jacklin shares Masters golf lead

WOBURN, England (AP) — Tony Jacklin, ex-British and U.S. Open golf champion, shared the first-round lead in the $120,000 Dunlop Masters tournament Wednesday.

Jacklin, who has won this event twice previously, shot a three-under-par 69 to tie for the lead with fellow Britons Michael King and Pip Elson and South African Tienie Britz.

Thirteen others broke par 72. Among them was American Fuzzy Zoeller, the U.S. Masters champion, who shot 71.

Another American challenger, Roger Maltbie, posted a 73 while Hubert Green recovered from a bad start for a 74.

Police keep control as rugby tourists start with a victory

EXETER, England (AP) — The touring South African Barbarians rugby team defeated Devons 27-18 Wednesday in the first game of their month long eight-match tour of Britain.

The controversiaal multi-racial South African team raced into an 18-3 lead at the half, Errol Tobias converting tries by Solomon Mhlaba, Timothy Konki and Edoud Maalan against one dop goal by Neil Thompson.

Tim Cocks added a fourth try for the Barbarians after the interval, with Tobias converting and adding a penalty. Devon wing John Hoskins collected two second half tries, both converted by John Watkinson, who also scored a penalty.

About 300 anti-apartheid demonstrators gathered outside the ground, but were kept under control by police.

Five minutes after the match started six youths invaded the pitch — to loud boos from the crowd — and were escorted away by police.

Tyees stick with Thistles

Mt. Douglas Thistles and Victoria High Tyees continued their neck-and-neck unbeaten pace atop the Greater Victoria High School Soccer League with victories Wednesday.

Both squads, who don't meet until Oct. 12, have 5-0 records.

In other matches, Spectrum and Belmont played to a 1-1 deadlock while Esquimalt and Stelly's battled to a 3-3 draw.

Denis Mamic, Louis Scigliano and Scott Weinberg scored for Thistles and Doug Parker scored for Oak Bay with two minutes remaining to rob Doug White of a shutout.

Two second-half goals by Antonio Nogueira produced the win for Tyees while Rick Roodbol earned his second shutout of the season.

At Spectrum, Mark Jackson opened scoring for the home team during the first half but Tim Johnson counted the equallizer after the break.

Al Russell scored twice to lead host Esquimalt and Nick Ross added a single. Darryl Ell, Barry Sam and Martin Vail replied for Stelly's, which led 1-0 at half time.

Clossen, Malli pace Silver Park

Les Clossen supplied most of the offence and Vic Malli was outstanding in goal as Duncan Silver Park Blades tripped Esquimalt Maple Leafs 4-2 Wednesday in the opening game of the South Island Big Six Hockey League at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Policeman cleared in Evans shooting

TORONTO (UPC) — The longest and most controversial single-death inquest in Ontario history has ended with the exoneration by a coroner's jury of a policeman who killed a 24-year-old black man in a street brawl.

After 17 hours of deliberations, the three-man, one-woman jury Wednesday unanimously cleared Cnst. John Clark of wrongdoing in the Aug. 9, 1978 death of Andrew "Buddy" Evans, finding the officer, who is white, had "reasonable and probable grounds to fire the gun in protection of his own life."

Evidence before the inquest indicated Clark, 25, had shot Evans after Evans had beaten Clark with the policeman's own billy club. The incident occurred after Evans and his 21-year-old brother Preston had gone to a disco armed with a machete to settle a score with the club's bouncer.

"The billy in the hand of Buddy Evans, a very angry man in close proximity to Constable Clark, must be construed as being a very dangerous weapon capable of causing grievous bodily injury or even death," the jury said.

Clark, 25, broke into tears as jury foreman Abbott Cooper read the verdict.

The panel, whose findings bear no legal weight, also handed down 37 recommendations, including:

—independant bureaus should investigate charges of police misconduct;

—outside police forces should investigate police killings;

—officers involved in shootings should have the right to counsel when giving statements;

—four race relations committees should be established in Toronto to link police and ethnic groups.

The verdict which concluded the 13-month hearing, including 47 days of testimony, came hours after speculation the $200,000 inquest could be aborted because of a vow by Doris Evans, the dead man's mother, to lay a private charge of murder against Clark.

Mrs. Evans, however, did not lay a charge, and was reported to have flown to Halifax Wednesday. She was not in court when the verdict came down.

The inquest was marked by some of the most acrimonious courtroom scenes in recent Ontario history, with lawyers for the Crown and the Evans family arguing bitterly and trading charges of misconduct. Members of Toronto's black community accused police of racism.

Bitter end to CNIB strike

EDMONTON (UPC) — The month-long wildcat strike by 11 blind Canadian National Institute for the Blind workshop employees has ended, but at least half of the workers feel they've been "railroaded" into reaching an agreement with the CNIB.

CNIB spokesman Don Murray said Wednesday the employees agreed to discontinue picketing CNIB headquarters when the two sides ironed out differences Tuesday concerning the duration of assessment and training programs.

However, one of the strikers, Cory Stuive, said "none of our demands have really been met; there's just been a lot of smooth talking. We've been railroaded into this agreement."

Even though the strike is officially over the workers have no jobs to return to. Two weeks after the workers walked out, CNIB officials closed the workshop and fired the employees, saying their demands could not be met.

The workers wanted the open-ended assessment periods and training programs limited to specific lengths. Many of the workers had been "in assessment" for several months. They also sought an increase in the $50-a-month allowance paid to those in the assessment program and wage parity with private industry for workshop duties.

Murray said the CNIB simply could not afford to meet the demands.

"We've reached a joint agreement and we'll attempt to find jobs for the 11 workers," Murray said.

"That's just great," Stuive said angrily. "We had jobs before the strike and they were supposed to find us jobs (outside the CNIB) anyway."

The CNIB paid workers on the assessment program 40 cents an hour — $50 a month — an issue that caused considerable criticism of the CNIB.

Meat fraud not kosher

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumer Affairs Minister Allan Lawrence warned food product retailers Wednesday he intends to clamp down on them after hearing allegations by Jewish community leaders that many products are not as kosher as advertised.

"This amounts to fraudulent representation at its worst and misleading advertising at the least, both of which will be severely dealt with," he said in a statement.

Jewish leaders in Montreal and Toronto told Lawrence during a recent meeting that some small retailers have been selling non-kosher products as kosher foods even though their establishments do not conform with the ancient Jewish dietary laws.

Non-confidence vote eyed over off-shore rights

WINNIPEG (UPC) — The Liberals will introduce a non-confidence motion when Parliament reconvenes next week if the Conservative government goes ahead and gives the provinces jurisdiction over off-shore resources.

Liberal MP Marc Lalonde Wednesday said a series of letters to maritime premiers shows Prime Minister Joe Clark was offering full ownership of offshore resources to coastal provinces.

"He has already decided to dismantle Petro-Can. Now it looks like he wants to dismantle Canada, too. At least he realizes that the change will be in the constitution and not by the prime minister," said Lalonde, who was in charge of federal-provincial relations in Pierre Trudeau's Liberal government.

Surrendering jursidiction over the resources would require a constitutional change.

Earlier, Lalonde had attacked the Conservative government's Petro-Can policy, saying it was necessary to Canada's role in international oil development.

Tories may allow RCMP to break law

OTTAWA (CP) — The government is still considering allowing the RCMP security service to break the law occasionally, as long as such activities are reported to a secret Commons committee every year, says a spokesman for Prime Minister Clark.

Solicitor-General Allan Lawrence is exploring this proposal — made by Clark during the campaign for the May 22 election which brought the Progressive Conservatives to power — as part of a review of all security laws, Clark's press secretary, Pierrette Lucas, said in an interview.

"We recognize there are instances where covert operations have got to proceed," Ms. Lucas said.

Lawrence is expected to bring in bills next year to revise the Official Secrets Act and to establish new ground rules for security service operations, she said.

If the government decides to go ahead with Clark's plan, it will be through legislation that can be debated in the Commons, not through cabinet order, she said.

Campaigning in Regina last April, Clark said it sometimes is necessary for those responsible for national security "to act in ways that are not open to the ordinary citizen, not open to you or me."

Clark said a Conserve government would "establish a legal framework so that any such extraordinary action by the security services of Canada must be approved in advance by a responsible minister of the government of Canada."

The minister would then report in private to a small Commons committee composed of members of all parties, including "people who can be counted upon to guard the civil rights of Canadians."

This committee would then make an annual report — Clark did not say to whom — indicating what actions the force sought, what response the minister gave and why.

Ms. Lucas said the idea would be "to make it practical for the RCMP to conduct on occasion certain investigations, but with the control of someone responsible to Parliament and the people ultimately."

Candu heat off Tories

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's spotty record in building a nuclear reactor in Argentina was a major reason for rejecting a $1.5 billion Canadian bid to sell a second plant to the South American country, says the head of Argentina's atomic energy commission.

In an 18-page statement received by the external affairs department Wednesday, Rear-Admiral Carlos Castro Madero said rising costs, delays and contract changes in construction of the first reactor influenced Argentina's decision. A West German-Swiss bid — costing $500 million more than Canada's — won the contract.

Castro Madero said other factors influenced his commission's recommendations, but did not specify Canada's nuclear safeguards. He said Argentina accepts safeguards which will be negotiated with the European governments involved and applied by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Canada has a chance to win future nuclear contracts, particularly if the first Canadian plant is finished quickly and problems are ironed out, he said.

In Ottawa, Liberal deputy leader Allan MacEachen blamed the contract loss on government indecision on safeguards and "imprudent remarks at a critical time" by External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald.

Miss MacDonald denied her comments on nuclear safeguards at the United Nations last week led to Argentina turning down Atomic Energy of Canada Limited's offer. MacEachen said she raised the possibility of tougher safeguards, torpedoing the Argentine deal.

But Miss MacDonald said in a Toronto interview the Argentine ambassador in Ottawa told her that neither the safeguards issue nor her comments on alleged human rights violations in Argentina were responsible for the reactor decision.

Castro Madero told journalists the German-Swiss proposal was chosen partly because Argentina would not have to rely on a single foreign supplier. And it would stimulate competition for future reactors.

'Last mandarin' bows out

OTTAWA (CP) — Gordon Robertson, 62, one of the last of the so-called mandarins in the federal public service, plans to leave at the end of the year because he has been too closely associated with the constitutional policies of the former Liberal government.

Prime Minister Clark said in an announcement Wednesday that Robertson, secretary to the cabinet for federal-provincial affairs since 1975, will be leaving at the end of the year.

Clark also released an exchange of highly compliementary letters between himself and the man who for many years worked with Liberal prime minister Pierre Trudeau on constitutional and national unity questions.

Robertson said in his Sept. 28 letter that in his many years in the Privy Council office — he was secretary to the cabinet between 1963 and 1975 — he has acquired exception knowledge of constitutional questions.

But in so doing he had become identified in a personal way with former policies and former governments "to a degree that could embarrass your efforts to establish your own approach to these areas."

Robertson has been in the public service since 1941. He went from powerful post to powerful post over the years. He and a handful of others — formally called the mandarins — had enormous influence in the running of government.

Robertson said in his letter that important decisions on constitutional and national unity matters must be taken in the near future. Decisions of critical importance concerning next year's Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association would have to be taken in the coming months.

"I would not want my presence, as the official head of the provincial relations office with direct responsibility for these matters, to inhibit in any way your capacity to establish and to carry our whatever new policies you think may be needed to preserve the unity of Canada and to create a better federalism for the future."

He said he enjoyed working with Clark and wished him success, "especially in the establishment of a stronger and more united Canada for the future."

Clark said in an Oct. 3 letter to Robertson that his government does want to change the federal constitutional approach and he appreciates Robertson's sensitivity.

Foothills plan hits data snag

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Energy Board ruled today it will not hear an application from Foothills Oil Pipe Line Ltd. to build an all-land pipeline from Alaska until further environmental, design and socio-economic information has been provided.

The federal regulatory agency also announced the hearings have been adjourned until Oct. 15 when they will resume in Vancouver to consider a competing application to move Alaskan oil to the lower 48 states from Trans Mountain Pipe Line Co.

The board will consider the Trans Mountain proposal first and not consider the Foothills route until the requested information has been produced.

The ruling means that a final decision on the competing applications may be set back for several weeks.

A speedy decision is required by the board because of the possibility the U.S. government will come out in favor of Canadian participation in moving Alaskan oil south over rival bids by several U.S. companies.

Foothills president Ed Phillips said in an interview that most of the information requested by the board is in hand. He said he is confident there will be no undue delay in the hearings as a result of the decision.

In effect, the board had decided to deal first with the Trans Mountain application while Foothills gathers more data instead of dealing with the two proposals together.

The move to Vancouver resulted from a motion by the Council for Yukon Indians to change the venue to the West Coast because of the impact of the pipeline in the Yukon, British Columbia and Alberta.

The council had also requested the board to require Foothills to produce more environmental information.

Hockey's Hull told to pay up

WINNIPEG (CP) — Hockey star Bobby Hull has been ordered to pay $6,000 to his estranged wife to make up for missed alimony payments for September and October.

Mr. Justice Louis Deniset made the ruling in Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on Wednesday after Hull's wife Joanne started contempt of court proceedings, saying Hull failed to comply with a Sept. 7 order for alimony.

That order stipulated Hull was to make monthly payments of $3,000 to his wife until divorce proceedings between them end and their assets are divided.

Justice Deniset also agreed Wednesday to a request from Hull's lawyer to adjourn the contempt hearing until Oct. 17.

Hull was not in court but, in an affidavit, the former Winnipeg Jet and Chicago Black Hawk said he can't afford the payments.

Biker booze level may be lowered

WINNIPEG (CP) — Lowering impairment levels for motorcyclists would help reduce motorcycle accidents, says a report by the provincial medical examiner's office.

The study, which recommends the blood-alcohol impairment level be lowered to .05 parts per thousand, says even below the current .08 legal impairment level, motorcyclists have a tendency to lose control of their vehicles.

"Alcohol affects an individual's visual acuity, muscle co-ordination, ability to interpret complex situations and reaction times even at low blood levels."

"Motorcyclists are more dependent on these particular parameters than are automobile drivers. A motorcyclist's sense of balance directly influences his ability to control his motorcycle," the report says.

The report, prepared by Dr. Kathy Grinwich, also recommends mandatory motorcycle helmets, improved training programs and manadatory lights on motorcycles.

Que. workers out despite GM pact

TORONTO (CP) — The United Auto Workers strike against General Motors of Canada Ltd. — which lasted only 30 minutes in Ontario — continued in Quebec today as almost 4,000 workers remained off the job at two GM plants north of Montreal.

Negotiators for the 33,000-member union and the company reached a tentative agreement at 12:30 a.m. today — a half-hour after the strike deadline — but 3,500 workers at the Ste. Therese plant and 350 at a diesel plant in nearby Ste. Eustache remained off the job.

GM spokesman Nick Hall called the walkout illegal, saying the workers chose to strike on "purely local issues."

He said the Ste. Therese local presented the company with 19 additional bargaining points at the last minute.

"There was virtually nothing we could do at that point because we had run out of time.

"We felt we had bargained in good faith and all of a sudden we were told that we had no agreement on these 19 items, items that had not been emphasized."

Claude Petelle, vice-president of Local 1136 at Ste. Therese, said picket lines were set up at both plants.

"The orders were to stay out," said Petelle.

He said Quebec-based union negotiators did not go along with the national agreement because of differences in the payment of government health insurance premiums in Quebec.

In the past, he said, 1.5 per cent of salary was deducted for health insurance, and this was paid by the company. But in 1978 the Quebec government changed the payment plan so that health insurance fees now go into the province's general income tax, rather than being deducted separately.

Petelle said a new forumula has to be found to cover the payments.

He added that his local hasn't scheduled a meeting for a ratification vote although national union officials said most locals probably would vote Sunday.

Company and the Ste. Therese local officials were hoping to meet sometime today to discuss the situation.

The union also represents workers in Ontario plants at Toronto, Windsor, Woodstock, St. Catharines and London and another Quebec factory at Montreal.

Arnold G. Stapleton, the company's chief negotiator, said the settlement was the same in all major respects as a contract signed last month with General Motors in the United States.

Liberties group slams harsh Canadian laws

OTTAWA (UPC) — Federal laws should be changed to replace an emphasis on law and order with a reverence for human rights, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association says.

"The law in this country has for too long been characterized by a reverence for order as against freedom," said the brief submitted to the McDonald Commission investigating RCMP wrongdoing Wednesday by CCLA President Prof. Walter Tarnopolsky, Director Prof. Irwin Kotler and lawyer Alan Borovoy.

"No conceivable emergency, including bloody war, requires so many government powers and so few citizen safeguards," the brief said. "We are impelled to suggest a number of amendments which would make invocation (of emergency acts) more difficult in the first place and review more effective thereafter."

One of the major recommendations was for a review of any intended emergency legislation under the War Measures Act for an "advisory opinion" by the Supreme Court of Canada or by a panel of high court judges appointed by the chief justice.

The association said the government should be denied the power under emergency acts to proclaim martial law, denaturalization, deportation, or exile or executions of citizens while regular courts were functioning.

The CCLA recommended the new legislation also provide for:

— the right to counsel to every person arrested under the authority of emergency powers.

— an independent agency to review search, seizure, arrest and detention that does not come before the courts in the usual manner.

— a system of compensation for all persons who suffer a deprivation of liberty as a direct result of the emergency powers.

Ottawa policy an open book

OTTAWA (CP) — Ron Atkey, minister of employment and immigration, announced today that he will let the public read the thick manuals that officials use to decide such things as who should be admitted to the country and who should get unemployment insurance benefits.

The manuals are heavy reading for the layman — several feet of complicated explanations of legislation laced with numbers, referring to clauses in bills, that mean nothing to the ordinary person.

And they will be edited, before they go on display, to keep secret the government's methods of investigating unemployment insurance cheaters and of screening immigrants.

The manuals will be put on display in 800 employment and immigration offices across the country by the end of November. It will cost the government about $50,000 with an estimated printing and distribution cost of $10 per manual.

Atkey said this will begin to lift a veil of secrecy around his department which he blamed on the former Liberal government and bureaucrats who think departmental information is government property.

He said it is the first major gesture by the government in its pledge of a freedom-of-information policy.

Further steps would be taken after passage of a freedom-of-information bill that will be proposed by the government to Parliament soon after the new Commons session begins next week.

B.C. grain bin hit with PCB threat

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — The federal government won't replace potentially dangerous industrial equipment at its Prince Rupert grain elevator because of budget cutbacks, says the elevators supervisor.

Charlie Paul said Wednesday that magnets containing PCBs have been replaced at all federal elevators except Prince Rupert. PCBs, polychlorinated biphenyls, are believed to cause cancer and birth defects.

Paul said the former Liberal government promised to replace the magnets, which are used to remove nails and other metal from grain, but the Conservative government postponed the change to cut costs.

Cost of replacing the magnets would be between $30,000 and $50,000, Paul said.

MP Jim Fulton (NDP—Skeena) has asked federal Agriculture Minister John Wise to take immediate action.

Paul said the greatest threat is to workers rather than to consumers. There was a leak in the elevator in 1974, he said.

Celebration fracas to court

A squabble between two community groups has ended up in B.C. Supreme Court.

The Victoria Celebrations Society has demanded the return of trophies and files and has sought damages against Helen Beirnes, Alan Houghton, Gerry Parker and Roy Wootten of the Greater Victoria Festival Society.

The defendants have denied the charges. No date has been set for a court hearing.

In a statement of claim filed at the Law Courts, the Victoria Celebrations Society said the defendants used to be officials of the society.

It charged that donations were made to the society through Beirnes which were not turned over to the society. This was denied by Beirnes who said she did pass on money to the society.

It also charged that records and books of the society were in the possession of Parker who after his resignation did not return the books to the society. Parker said he gave the books to the auditors last January who returned them to the society in February.

The statement of claim said the four defendants and Shiela Murdoch resigned Jan. 24 leaving Glenda Osborne, Herbert Osborne and June Beane as directors.

New directors were elected Feb. 21 — June Beane, president, and Bruno Nikkol, Glenda Osborne, Graham Brawnell, Sue Schroeder and Herbert Osborne.

Beane and Glenda Osborne found certain files missing five days later which were returned March 8 after a Victoria Day parade permit was issued to the Greater Victoria Festivals Society. The defendants said all the files were left intact and none was taken by them.

The society charged the defendants received cheques made payable to the Victoria Celebrations Society and returned them to be issued to the Greater Victoria Festivals Society. This was denied by the defendants.

The Victoria Celebrations Society also said the following items are missing: The May Queen cape and crown., returned anonymously to the doorstep of the president since the action was started; red satin imitation roses and a crown; 100 slides; and a ceremonial sword.

The defendants replied they don't have the cape nor did they dispose of it, the crown was returned to its owner Saanich municipality, they had no knowledge of what happened to the imitation roses, no knowledge of the whereabouts of the slides, and the sword has been returned to its owner, radio station CJVI.

The group also said Beirnes represented to municipal government that it was defunct and thereby cut off $10,000 of inter-municipal funding which was obtained by Beirnes' group.

The defendants admitted they obtained inter-municipal financing on behalf of Greater Victoria Festival Society, but not the Greater Victoria Festivals Association as stated by the Victoria Celebrations Society.

In its claim, the Victoria Celebrations Society said it wants damages against the defendants "for misrepresentation and misappropriation" of the society's assets and status, delivery of all books and records to the society, return of all trophies, crown, flowers, slides, sword and files, an order for an accounting and a declaration that all funds donated to the Victoria Celebrations Society through the defendants be remitted.

Before the judge

A 43-year-old man serving a term in Oakalla Prison and wanted in the U.S. so he can serve out the remainder of a 10-year sentence was given a further six months in jail Wednesday in Victoria provincial court.

Phillip Wayne Lyons pleaded guilty to one count of fraud and Crown counsel Ken Salt entered stays of proceedings on three others.

Salt told Judge William Ostler that Lyons went to the Los Angeles National Bank on Dec. 5, 1978, and opened an account with a $100 deposit. He then went to Boise, Idaho, where he opened another account at the First Security Bank of Idaho with worthless checks from the California bank.

On Jan. 11 this year, Lyons opened an account at the Bank of Nova Scotia, 702 Yates, with a $50 deposit and, later in the day, deposited $803.19 in U.S. funds from an American bank. The next day, he withdrew $850. The Canadian bank later learned the checks deposited Jan. 11 were with an unauthorized signature.

Lyons' criminal history started in January, 1959, in Milwaukee when he was given a 90-day jail term for fraud.

Defence lawyer James Main said that although Lyons has spent most of his adult life in prisons, he has the equivalent of more than three years of university education, attending the University of Minnesota in 1955 and 1956. At one time, Main said, Lyons studied criminology and was on the board of deacons of the Baptist church. Main said his client was described as articulate and affable.

"If he were to turn his hand to honest pursuits," Ostler said, "he'd be a great success in life."

Vaughan Grant Armstrong, 31, was charged with being unlawfully at large from William Head penitentiary.

Armstrong was allegedly on an outing from the federal, medium-security pris- Wednesday night and was reported missing from the Crystal Pool at 11:15 p.m.

Victoria police picked him up about three hours later from a residence on St. James Street.

Judge Harold Alder remanded Armstrong until Friday.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Earl Emil Erickson, 45, of 7908 West Coast Road, $500; Anthony Michael Finlay, 21, of 985 Greenridge, $400; Paul Steven McLean, 20, of 1744 Kisber, $400; Kathleen Margaret MacFarlane, 21, of 1126 McClure, $100; Randolph Kenneth Poulis, 23, of Fort St. John, $100; and Jorge Antonio Delcastillo, 20, of 1485 Fort, $50.

Two years for knifing

A 36-year-old man who knifed another in the chest and neck in a drunken brawl was told Wednesday there is no likelihood of rehabilitation until he recognizes that he must live within certain rules.

"Nothing I say to you can be of much assistance. What you did was clearly wrong," county court Judge Peter Millward told Thomas Bernard Mathers.

He sentenced Mathers to two years less one day in jail, to be followed by two years probation during which he must not enter any bar, and for 10 years he is prohibited from possession any firearm.

Mathers was found guilty by a jury of wounding with intent by stabbing Ronald Kenneth Westman outside the Royal Olympic Hotel on Johnson Street in the early hours of June 14. The two men were among a group during which an argument developed over Westman's missing cap.

Mathers has racked up 30 criminal convictions going back to 1960 including break-ins, thefts, armed robbery, uttering and dealing in forged documents, possession of stolen property and burglar tools.

Judge Millward said considering Mathers' age, criminal record and the circumstances of the offence, the choice was a lengthy jail term which will protect the public for that period but recognizes that at some point he will be released with little likelihood of any change, or a less lengthy jail term which may encourage him to change his conduct.

Also in county court, Judge Millward sentenced Douglas Peter Harder, 27, to 30 days in jail, to be served on weekends, for attempting to obstruct justice Oct. 10, 1978, by attempting to dissuade Gordon Arthur Herriott, 59, by threats from giving evidence in a criminal case involving Harder and Isabel Dalores Reventlow.

Herriott testified the incident occurred in the Sidney Hotel beer parlor and Harder said "I want to get a good look at your face because you look good dead" and "I'll see you in court." But Harder said it was a misunderstanding after Herriott invited him to step outside the pub.

The incident was in connection with a charge of conducting an illegal lottery to which Harder pleaded guilty and was given a suspended sentence and a year's probation.

He has a criminal record totalling 10 convictions, most of them for possession and trafficking in drugs.

Millward noted that Harder and others said he had reformed but this was a common claim from persons facing sentence. He hoped his efforts at reform would continue.

He also said the apparent lenience with which Harder has been treated in the past has not had a salutary effect.

Judge E.J.C. Stewart suspended sentence for John Frederick Walski, 23, and placed him on probation for 18 months with the condition he not work in nightclub entertainment nor be a bouncer.

He found Walski guilty earlier of theft of $639 from the "float" of Surfside Cabaret on Nov, 3, 1978.

Stewart said Walski's difficulties have arisen because he had not chosen his companions well. Walski had no criminal record at either the adult or juvenile level.

Dear Abby:

Thank you for urging readers to take a course in cardiac pulmonary resuscitation, review the written instructions periodically, and later take refresher courses in order to know exactly what to do for victims of cardiac arrest.

Perhaps neither you nor your readers are aware of what can happen when well-meaning people don't know what they are doing. A smattering of knowledge is worse than none. CPR instructions half-forgotten put me in the plight I'm in today at age 60.

Last year my husband, 65, had a heart attack on the golf course. His buddy, who had a little CPR information, pounded him into breathing again.

My husband lived, but he has no memory, is unable to work at all, and is totally disabled in just about every way. You see, if the brain doesn't get enough oxygen in those few seconds after the heart stops beating, severe brain damage can occur. The heart can be made to resume beating, but the brain damage is permanent.

My advice is — if you aren't sure of what you're doing, in case of a heart attack, do nothing. I'm sure my husband isn't thrilled to be just 'breathing.' He talks constantly but makes no sense at all.

Half A Widow

Dear Widow:

Thank you for writing. I learned something today, and so did my readers: A little learning is a dangerous thing!

Dear Abby:

My husband is an engineer for a large oil company. I am very supportive of him and his work. We enjoy our weekends together and are especially fond of fishing.

A service company has invited the engineers from my husband's company on a deep-sea fishing trip on a superb boat. It's something my husband and I have wanted to do for a long time, but couldn't afford.

The wives were invited on a previous fishing trip, but because some of them got seasick and sunburned, they are not included on any more trips. I'm a good sailor and don't see why I should miss a terrific weekend because some of the wives are wet blankets.

Withhold Name

Dear Withhold:

You can start by writing to the heads of the company and starting your objections.

Dear Abby:

Your column about the 14-year-old boy who thought he had VD and didn't know where to go came as no surprise to those of us who work in public health. It is common.

It may be helpful to youngsters, parents and educators alike to know that VD treatment is free at public health Ministry clinics. There are no age limits for patients. Treatment is confidential; consent of parents is not required.

Dr. Jim Ricks sees youngster in context with school and family

Child help best when early

By JANE COVERNTON

More could be done for children with behavioral or emotional problems if they were given help earlier.

That is the conclusion drawn by the director of Victoria's Integrated Services team, based on a survey of those who come for help.

Integrated Services, 1951 Cook, is a department of the ministry of health. Teams of psychologists, psychiatrists and social workers offer help for families with troubled children from one year to 18 years of age.

Director Dr. Jim Ricks says many teen-agers who come in were having school problems earlier that were not recognized.

"There is a tendency to wait until the child is showing major difficulties. Often the family damage is so bad that you just have to sit back and watch it all unfold," he says.

In a six-month period, there were 460 referrals to Integrated Services — 62 per cent of them boys, 37 per cent girls.

That is almost twice as many cases as the same period last year.

Ricks says the increase is probably not due to some great breakdown in society but just because the service is becoming better known.

The survey shows that referrals drop off at the age of six, increase again to the age of eight, drop and bottom out at 11 or 12. Then there is a steady climb into the teen years.

Ricks thinks that more attention should be paid to those ages — six and 11 — when referrals drop off.

He stresses the necessity for prevention — recognizing problems early.

But how do you tell whether your child is just being a normal naughty kid or whether there is a real problem?

"It's helpful if you have a place to go and talk. Talk to a teacher, a counsellor, the family doctor, even just a friend," says Ricks.

He gives some examples of how early help could prevent major problems.

Adopted children are often insecure about their families, even when the adoptive parents think all questions concerning the adoption were settled long ago.

Ricks says he's seen several teen-aged girls who lie, steal, and run away. If parents notice their child is unhappy at home they should get help before they get to this stage.

Another example:

Parents have trouble handling their boy's high energy level. It gets him in trouble and he loses friends. They start to indulge him, allowing him to come home instead of playing with other children. At the same time, they over-react to little things. The boy gets his kicks out of it. He gets into a cycle in which he loses more and more friends. He becomes more belligerent at school.

Finally it gets to the stage where the parents can't handle him and he is put in a foster home.

Some early help could have prevented it.

Another problem they see often is where the father has been absent for some time. The mother has been forced to set the system. The father comes back and starts laying down rules. There is confusion and uncertainty. Often there is a delayed response — two or three years after the father's return.

"If military families, families where the father must be away, could realize this was happening they could work it out," says Ricks.

Another high-risk situation is the single-parent family, where the child is unhappy at losing a parent, the mother may be struggling financially.

"Sometimes a little bit of help can prevent all kinds of things."

At Integrated Services, the help comes in the form of an assessment and then work with the child and his family.

Ricks says there is no attempt to psychoanalyse children or impose any rigid system of therapy.

"We view the child in the context of family and school. We work with the context, doing as little intervention as required. We come in as a consultant to get the system working again. Often one visit does it," he says.

Ricks says there is a growing tendency to place full responsibility with a helping agency. They are interested in getting people to help themselves.

"For example, if a parent comes in and says 'My kid took off downtown. How are you going to get her back?' we probably can't do much. Better to say 'My kid took off downtown. Can you help me get her back?' "

Pill can trigger nutrition deficiency

Many letters from readers are understandably concentrated on dietary problems. A few refer to specific curcumstances. For example:

I have been taking contraceptive pills for two years. I have had no unusual side effects. I have born two children who are perfectly health. My question is: Do I need any special foods in my diet because I am taking the pill?

—Mrs. B.R.

Dear Mrs. R.:

A group of nutritionists recently examined this problem and came to an interesting conclusion. They believe that women who are taking the oral contraceptives may develop a deficiency in folic acid, pyridoxine and other vitamines.

Even those women who are apparently healthy and have normal hemoglobin should take vitamin supplements. Iron, vitamin C, B complex, pyridoxine and folic acid should be included in the vitamin supplements. It must be remembered and emphasized that these additional vitamins do not substitute for good nutrition. They simply replace substances that are lost in many women who are taking the oral contraceptive.

Another letter:

Dear Doctor:

I have a two-year-old daughter who is heavier that I know she should be. What suggestions do you have for slimming her down?

—Mrs. F. J.

Dear Mrs. J.:

Plumpness in a very young child may be "cute," but wise parents like yourself recognize that an obese child is laying the groundwork to become an obese adolescent and an obese adult.

If a child is overweight at the age of 2, and gaining too fast it is important to decrease the calorie itake. Skim milk should be substituted for whole milk. It is just as nutritious, since it provides the necessary proteins and minerals and, without the fat content, cuts down on the calories. Substitute fruit for rich desserts and sweets.

Yet none of these changes should be made without the specific recommendation of the doctor or pediatrician. For, below the age of 2, using skim milk may remove some of the essential fatty acids that the baby needs for healthy growth and development.

A third letter:

Dear Doctor:

Do all elderly people require additional vitamins?

—Mrs. T. C. C.

Dear Mrs. C.:

The nutrician of the elderly, especially those who have chronic illness or limited resources, must be carefully watched. They need the doctor's constant reminder that their nutritional requirements and vitamin supplements must be maintained.

"What does he want to eat, a bowl of ants?"

Statistics give ups and downs of eating habits

NUTRITION MATTERS

Dr. Elizabeth Bright-See and Jane Hope

We're eating seven times more pickles today than we did in 1910. We're gobbling down 820 per cent more chicken, 800 per cent more grapefruit (yet munching on 26 per cent fewer apples), 76 per cent less butter but a whopping 681 per cent more margarine. We're nibbling 18 per cent fewer candy bars, but swallowing 157 per cent more soft drinks. We've obviously fallen in love with canned tuna, as sales have soared 1300 per cent over the past 50 years.

Generally, Canadians have an abundant supply of food. That's a blessing, because we certainly move to eat! But, we enjoy eating the foods we like best. From 1952 to 1976 the "average" Canadian increased his meat and fruit consumption by 26 per cent. Total daily products (as milk) decreased nearly 26 per cent and sugar consumption decreased three per cent.

We ate a few more vegetables, drank more fruit juice and coffee, added more catsup, bought more cake mixes (but not as many powdered dessert products), ate more fish and gulped more soup. We cut back on many candy bars (perhaps because of increased cost of sugar and cocoa prices) but we did munch 38 per cent more potato chips, as well as corn, cereal and cheese-based snack foods.

Manufacturers shipped more alcoholic beverages, in fact 86 per cent more. We sold 146 per cent more wine and 47 per cent more beer. (We should note that some of these beverages that are shipped or sold are not necessarily consumed in Canada).

Yet, the modern North American consumes fewer calories each day than we did in 1910. But we get far less exercise, and as a result, our weight has increased substantially during the last 15 years. Perhaps the most alarming dietary change is the increase in fats — nearly a doubling in consumption of shortening and shortening oils. Part of this is perhaps due to an increase in deep fried foods — particularly through fast food operations. Fat now provides an alarming 42 percent of our calories each day. We're eating 27 per cent more dietary fat than our grandparents did in 1910 — an increase now being linked to certain disorders — heart disease, some forms of cancer and obesity.

Not surprisingly, Canadians seem to be cutting back on eating some of the foods they believe, for a variety of reasons, they should avoid.

We've reduced our consumption of some foods considered "fattening" such as bread and fresh potatoes. We've cast a dietary frown upon foods that may contribute to an increased cholesterol level — eggs, whole milk, butter and heavy cream. But we're inconsistent. We're giving up eggs, but we've increased the amount of ice cream (often high in fat content and calories) and now slurp about 2.5 gallons a year! We're substituting french fries for plain potatoes. We're eating less "low-prestige" items like cereal, bread, which ounce-for-ounce have less than half the calories of fat, no more calories than protein and contain several essential nutrients including fibre. At the same time, we're eating more fats that have lots of calories and few nutrients. Fast food outlets have probably had the greatest impact on our contemporary diet and account for our rapidly increased consumption of chicken, beef, hard cheese, ice milk, yogurts, frozen french fries, soft drinks and, of course, those pickles!

Adolescent, parent life-crisis shared?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The rebellious adolescent caught up in a quest for identity may have parents passing through a similar life-crisis, say three Winnipeg psychiatrists.

The opposing forces of teenagers coming to grips with adulthood and adults facing old age can rip a family apart, say Dr. John Toews, Dr. Harry Prosen and Dr. R. M. Martin.

The psychiatrists, who have studied for three years this collision between rising and declining expectations, presented their findings this week to the annual meeting of the Canadian Psychiatric Association.

Trouble comes when parents face mid-life transition as their children are going through the trials of adolescence, they said.

"While the youth faces an expanding future, the parent sees a future of consolidation, re-examination, retrenchment and eventually failing health and death," the psychiatrists said.

As parents begin to abandon old dreams, their children acquire new ones. As parents begin to realize they are largely helpless to change their lives, their children are in rebellion to change and shape their own.

The result is family turmoil. Teenagers chafe under parental authority and parents, who already fear that they cannot control their own lives, realize that they cannot control their children's.

The psychiatrists said the best way to avoid friction is to help parents and children understand their own development. Then each will begin to respect the transition the other is going through and realize that their problems are not so unique.

Content of alcohol reason for caution

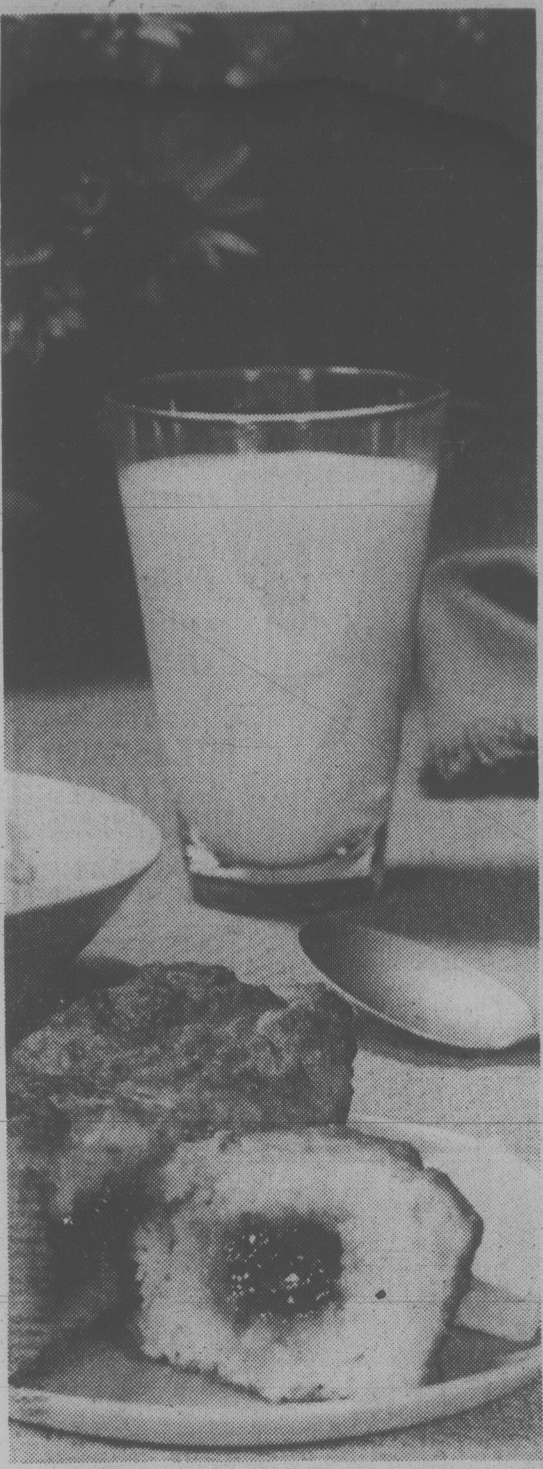
Dr. Jean Mayer
Dr. Johanna Dwyer



Healthier, easier on the liver

Alcohol is a potent junk food, high in calories — a two-ounce (59.15 ml) martini provides 150 — and almost devoid of anything else of nutritional value. For this reason alone there are good grounds for very moderate use. But there are other reasons as well, as recently reported by experts assembled by the American Society for Clinical Nutrition.

This group of experts looked into the relationship between diet and various diseases and concluded that prolonged overconsumption of alcohol almost certainly will produce one of three serious, if not fatal, liver problems: cirrhosis, fatty liver, and alcoholic hepatitis.

Cirrhosis, the most serious, is an irreversible condition in which fibrous deposits build up in the liver. It is seven times more common in alcoholics than in non-drinkers and is much more prevalent in states like Massachusetts, which have a high alcohol consumption per capita, than in states like Utah, where consumption is low. The longer the drinking continues, the greater the chances of its development. Eventually, between 10 and 20 percent of all heavy drinkers will develop cirrhosis.

The effects of alcohol on the development of cirrhosis have been studied in experimental animals and in people who are victims of the disease. For example, baboons, who react much like human beings when under the influence of alcohol, were given half their daily calories in the form of alcohol and fed, in all other respects, a nutritionally adequate diet. As time went on, they developed fatty livers, hepatitis, and finally cirrhosis.

Studies of human alcoholics show the same results. But since most heavy drinkers do not have scientists planning their diets, their problem is often compounded by malnutrition. One study of German alcoholics, who for over 25 years had consumed between one-third and one-half of their total calories as alcohol, revealed that 50 percent had severe liver disease.

Other studies using volunteers who were not heavy drinkers showed that, even on good diets, the addition of substantial amounts of alcohol caused fat to accumulate in the liver, while diets that substituted carbohydrate for alcohol calories had no such effect. Fortunately, fatty liver and hepatitis can be completely reversed if alcohol is removed from the diet. However, this is not true of cirrhosis.

We still do not know just how alcohol damages the liver, but there is general agreement that the alcohol itself is probably toxic, and that the effects are made worse by malnutrition. Since alcohol blunts the appetite while it provides calories, the more that is drunk the greater the risk that the person will not eat enough food to meet his or her nutrient requirements. In addition, alcohol metabolism actually increases the need for some nutrients, like the B vitamin thiamin.

Turning to the other side of the coin what are the risks of reducing large alcohol intakes? The experts could come up with none, except for the temporarily unpleasant withdrawal for those who have become dependent on alcohol. The benefits, on the other hand, are many. The report cites the experience of countries such as Norway and Sweden with vigorous alcohol-control programs which have significantly cut the rate of liver diseases and other physical and mental health problems from alcohol abuse. Similarly, the Canadians, who have put very heavy taxes on alcohol, found that liver diseases fell in prevalence after the taxes went into effect.

As a matter of fact, this is what happened in the U.S. in the 'dry decade' of the 1920s when Prohibition was in effect. Death rates from cirrhosis fell from the World War I rate of 11 per 100,000 to seven. When repeal was passed in the early '30s the rates went right back to 11.

Of course, we do not advocate a return of Prohibition as an answer. Nor do the experts who prepared the report. But at the same time, we need to do what we can to decrease excessive alcohol consumption, particularly since its harmful effects are most apparent at high doses.

Moderation is clearly in order.

According to a study conducted ten years ago, only five per cent of elementary school children were eating good breakfasts each day. Among the high school students surveyed, nearly one third regularly had no breakfast at all.

Improving upon morning eating habits is not that difficult a task. Actually, a nutritious breakfast can be built around a bowl of fortified cereal with milk. Fortified cereal contributes generous amounts of important nutrients such as iron, niacin, and thiamin. Milk is an excellent source of calcium, as well as vitamins A and D.

Presweetened Cereals is a free 8-page booklet that is offered by Kellogg Salada Company. This booklet discusses the nutritional value of presweetened cereals — the breakfast cereals which have gained considerable popularity and criticism in recent years.

The development of an efficient transportation system has posed a tremendous challenge for Canada. In terms of area, Canada is the second largest nation in the world. While our population is concentrated along our southern borders, there are great distances separating the major population centres. Similarly, although Canada has an abundance of natural resources, many of these are located in remote, barely accessible regions.

Canada's harsh climate has further complicated the construction of a national transportation system.

Transportation — a Unifying Link, is a 38-page book that describes how Canada has responded to the trials of building an effective system of transportation. The book is available free of charge from the Canadian Unity Information Office, Box 1986, Station "B", Ottawa, Ontario, K1P 6G6.

Cobwebs cloak table as fast foods bloom

By JANE E. BRODY
New York Times

Meals around the family table, while not quite dead and ready to be buried, are a far less common phenomenon these days than in decades past. Today, as a result of increased travel, smaller families, working wives, and increased discretionary income and leisure time, more than half of all North Americans eat more than half their meals away from home.

The main away-from-home meal, of course, is lunch. Mom may brown-bag it at her office job, but daughter eats in the school cafeteria, son grabs a quick lunch at a pizza or hamburger joint and Dad eats at a restaurant-bar. Once or twice a week, the family's supper may come from a local carry-out, or the whole family goes out for dinner.

The main beneficiaries of this new pattern of North American eating are the fast-food chains, where edibles of sometimes dubious nutritional value roll out like car parts on an assembly line. The fast-food industry has been growing at a rate of nearly 15 percent a year; pizza has become a staple, and the burger — billions are sold annually — now challenges the hot dog as North America's principal dish.

In addition to pizza, burgers and franks, North American appetites are regularly whetted by such fast foods as fried fish and chicken, roast beef sandwiches, tacos, pancakes, french fries, onion rings, soft drinks and shakes. Many of these foods have been attacked by nutritionists and public health physicians because they are high in fats and-or sugar and overly laden with calories for the amount of essential nutrients they provide. Fairly or not, fast foods have been singled out as symbolic of what's wrong with nutrition on the continent today.

Remember when a shake was a milk shake? "Milk" has been dropped from the name on many menus because most fast-food shakes are not made with whole milk, cream or ice cream. Rather, they're usually an ersatz food, made primarily from vegetable oil (often highly saturated coconut or palm oil), casein, nonfat milk solids, emulsifiers, flavorings and sugar. The adjective "thick" often precedes the word shake to keep you from noticing the absence of "milk."

But no matter what is said about them by health professionals, the 140,000 fast-food establishments sprinkled across the country like salt on fries are likely to continue to prosper and multiply. Americans are attracted to them because they're fast, filling, easy, inexpensive, attractive to youngsters and, to be honest, because millions have learned to like the taste of what's dished up.

First, fast food is not synonymous with "junk" food. The latter is so called because it provides few or no nutrients besides sugar and calories. Soft drinks, pastries, candy and other calorie-dense and nutrient-deficient foods are classic junk foods. Although a chocolate bar or doughnut may contain other ingredients that are more nourishing than sugar and fat, the amount of essential nutrients is disproportionately small compared with the total number of calories they contain.

As far as good nutrition is concerned, there's no room in your diet for junk foods unless you have fulfilled your day's requirements for essential nutrients and can afford to consume extra calories without gaining unwanted weight.

The main problem with most fast-food meals is that they're not nutritionally balanced. Those of pizza, chicken or beef usually contain more than enough protein for a child or adult for one meal. But for the number of calories they provide (far more than a third of an ordinary adult's daily requirements), they tend to oversupply you with fats and salt and to undersupply you with vitamins A and C, several B vitamins and iron.

While the meals themselves are low in sugar, the typical drinks (soft drinks and shakes) and desserts are not. In terms of food categories, they are sadly deficient in vegetables (except potatoes) and fruit.

Thus a good rule of thumb is to be sure you eat salad, vegetables and fruit at your other meals on the days when you eat fast food. If you're lucky, the fast-food restaurant you frequent will offer a salad bar, designed in part to please the diet-conscious, who find little acceptable fare when they take the "break" the advertisements say they deserve by feeding their families fast foods.

Finding a nutritious drink at a fast-food restaurant is often impossible. Milk or fruit juice (not fruit drink), if on the menu, is probably the best choice for youngsters. Regular soda provides no nutrients besides a hundred or more calories of sugar (which is why it's referred to as "empty" calories), and diet sodas contain saccharin, which causes cancer in laboratory animals.

Shakes are high in fat (usually cholesterol-raising saturated fats), sugar and calories. A fast-food shake or a real milkshake or malted now and then is all right, if you can afford the calories and are not on a strict low-cholesterol or sugar-restricted diet.

Size, of course, can make a huge difference in calories. A small Dairy Queen chocolate malt, for example, contains 400 calories, but a large one has 830. Consumer Reports points out in its current issue that while fast-food shakes are a good source of calcium, "plain milk provides more calcium with fewer calories." Their analysis showed that a single shake may contain as much as 8 to 14 teaspoons of sugar.

For adults, most chains offer coffee and tea. If none of the alternatives to sweet or fat-laden drinks pleases you, ask for water.

Another nutritional pitfall is french-fried potatoes. Potatoes, as they come from the ground, are a nutritional bargain. Balanced against the proportion of daily calories they provide, they supply larger percentages of daily requirements for protein and many vitamins and minerals. They are low in fat and high in desirable complex carbohydrates.

But when fried in deep fat, potatoes become a high-fat, high-calorie food, and when sprinkled with salt or doused with ketchup, their nutritional value shrinks even further. A typical fast-food serving of fries contains 200 or more calories, most of them fat calories. Another problem is that many restaurants that do a lot of frying use saturated fats, and those that use polyunsaturates often heat their oils enough to cause potentially toxic chemical changes.

Now we come to the main part of the fast-food meal: Most people are astonished to discover the caloric value of their favorite burger-with-everything-on-it. According to nutritional analyses supplied by the companies, the Burger King Whopper has 606 calories, the McDonald's Big Mac has 541 and the Big "Brazier" Deluxe has 470.

A Colonel Sanders Kentucky Fried Chicken dinner (two pieces of chicken, cole slaw and rolls) has 595 calories (665 for the crispy version), and the three-piece dinner has 830 calories (950 for the crispy pieces). A fish-and-chips dinner at Long John Silver's, containing two pieces of fish, fries and cole slaw, has 955 calories.

Pizza is one of the better-balanced fast foods, with plenty of protein and less fat than other types of meals. At Pizza Hut, half of a 10-inch pizza "supreme" with thin crust contains 510 calories, half a thin-crusted 13-inch cheese pizza has 850 calories and half a thick-crusted 15-inch cheese pizza has 1,200 calories.

Pizza's main drawback is its high salt content, a negative factor for those predisposed to developing high blood pressure. Also, if you're watching salt, skip the pickles on your burgers.

Dining out trend causes worker shortage fears

TORONTO (CP) — Canada's food and hospitality industry faces a critical shortage of trained personnel with 6,000 jobs unfilled, says the chairman of a committee examining the restaurant industry.

And another 5,000 new jobs are created in the industry each year, says John Arena, whose committee was established two years ago by the Ontario industry and tourism ministry.

Arena, the owner of Winston's restaurant in Toronto, says the hospitality and food service industry faces accelerated growth partly due to the country's eating-out trend.

Canadians now spend about 35 per cent of their food dollars outside the home.

Arena said that when he recently acquired a country inn in southwestern Ontario, he advertised locally to fill 10 positions but found three.

"The shortage is bad in Toronto but we scramble for help," he said. "Outside the big cities, across Ontario, the situation is impossible."

As a result of the skilled manpower shortage, and its effect on the province's $5-billion tourism trade, the Ontario Hostelry Institute came into being last month as a joint two-year project of the education and industry and tourism ministries. The education ministry is supporting the venture with a $1-million grant.

Housed at George Brown College, the institute is designed to increase the number and quality of chefs, cooks, bakers and others hospitality industry workers.

The planning committee also found as many as 20,000 workers, now holding jobs in the food service and hospitality trade, who could use additional training to upgrade their skills.

"Anyone can open a hotel or restaurant," says George Slavinski, chairman of the hospitality and tourism management program at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto.

"You don't need practice, you don't need skills. All you need is money."

One reason for the shortage of qualified personnel in the past has been a kind of social snobbery against working in the industry — a snobbery that hopefully is beginning to fade.

‘About 31 per cent of parents surveyed in our study said they would now accept it if their kids became cooks or waiters," said Arena. "This is a significant change from five years ago."

Those interested in becoming cooks can find courses at nearly two-thirds of Ontario's 22 community colleges.

But the schools turn out only 10 per cent of the trained personnel in the hospitality trade and are not able to to turn out qualified cooks, sous-chefs or head chefs.

Causes of dismay at RJH detailed in annual report

There's both good and bad news in the 1978-79 annual report of the Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Chief of staff Dr. Elinor Powell said RJH experienced a sense of satisfaction in the first months of 1978 when its hospital accreditation was renewed for another three years. So much for the good news.

"But by early 1979, our feelings were turned to dismay by our inability to meet adequately the needs of those acutely ill patients requiring hospital care," she said.

Dr. Powell said the greatest handicap faced by staff is having to work with large number of long term care patients who occupy acute care beds.

Early in 1978 there were 151, by November last year it had risen to 201 (30 per cent of the hospital's total beds) just before Glengarry extended care hospital's new wing opened.

But by this spring there were still 127 and in the long term, many RJH beds will continue to be occupied by people who don't need them.

"The restrictions of the budget of 1975 have been felt increasingly. Our skilled teams of nurses are broken up and untoward incidents are more common. Increased surveillance by physicians has become necessary, both to instruct uninitiated nurses and to review treatments."

For many months during the 1978-79 hospital year, laboratory personnel were reduced so much that only emergency work could be done on weekends.

"At year's end, the board had instructed administration to examine if further economies were feasible, but it is certain that if our priority is towards high quality patient care, then we must by a considerable margin, exceed our allotted budget in the upcoming year."

Other incidents demonstrating how strapped the Jubilee is for money and space are also in the report. The director of the cancer clinic said staff were using space to a maximum "with patients receiving chemotherapy in the main corridor."

Nursing director Elizabeth Maude-Moore said most days all acute care beds are filled by 4 p.m.

"This leaves only halls and linen cupboards for the six to 18 admissions that come through emergency during the evening and night hours."

This overbooking means more valuable time must be taken up the next morning in arranging a complicated series of transfers to get the new acute care patients into proper wards.

"Transfers affect nearly all hospital departments and the notification of everyone who needs to know becomes a very difficult task as does the task of keeping track of clothes and belongings."

The pathology department said renovations have alleviated overcrowding and provided more storage space.

"However, the 'Dickensian' autopsy and mortuary facilities remain atrocious."

The cardiovascular surgery section performed nearly one heart operation a day during the year, but was still waiting for four pieces of equipment ordered in the 1977-78 year, one of them a backup heart-lung machine.

"At present there is only one pump in this hospital and it would be disaster if anything would happen in the future," said their report.

Pathologist Dr. K. R. Thornton was concerned at a provincial government-imposed cut in the 1979-80 budget to buy capital equipment, which was mentioned by board treasurer Ted Balderson at the annual meeting Wednesday night.

"What has been done for redress of this dreadful cut?" he asked.

Balderson said it would be discussed at the next board meeting.

His section of the annual report said that the 1978-79 year at the Jubilee had been a difficult one financially but despite this the hospital has been able to operate at a high level of utilization and to provide maximum service to the community.

"Further indications are that we will be able to continue to discharge our responsibilities in the health care field for the foreseeable future without serious impairment."

Labor brands UIC changes 'devastating'

By MIKE HUGHES

Working people should become more aware of the callous proposals the federal Conservative government is considering for changes to the unemployment insurance program, the Victoria Labor Council was told Wednesday night.

Council president John Shields said organized labor should be preparing a stiff opposition to proposed cutbacks in insurance coverage.

He produced a working paper dated July 12 from employment and immigration Canada called Unemployment Insurance in The 1980s: A Review of Its Appropriate Role and Design.

Shields said the contents of the document are "quite devastating."

He said it is particularly harsh in its approach to women and young people. In Victoria, he said, about 50 per cent of the jobless are in the 18-24 age group.

The working paper lays out a schedule for a complete review of the unemployment insurance program:

Among the immediate objectives to be put into legislation during the upcoming session of Parliament are the treatment of those who voluntarily quit their jobs or who are fired for misconduct.

Also under consideration, the paper says, is a separate rate structure for those with dependents and those without.

Previous reports have said the Tory administration is looking at ways of cutting unemployment insurance benefits, particularly to seasonal workers, people who quit their jobs or are fired and those out of work due to sickness or pregnancy.

The government has also been reported to be reviewing the possibility of giving unemployed people bare subsistence and studying whether the earnings of other members of the family should be taken into consideration in determining the amount.

"I think the more people that can be made aware of the implications of the proposed policy, the more possible it will be to raise opposition," Shields said.

The B.C. Federation of Labor will hold a rally next Thursday in Vancouver to register a protest to changes in the unemployment insurance program which took effect in July.

One delegate asked whether the labor council had considered holding a similar rally in Victoria. Shields said "the time for rallies is after people have been forewarned about what is planned."

In other council business, the delegates agreed to recommend to next month's B.C. Federation of Labor convention that organized labor push for government regulations which require employers to negotiate layoffs with employees in the event of a plant closure.

Special ICBC rate on taking children

Special insurance coverage will be available through the Insurance Corporation of B.C. for parents and other volunteers providing transportation for school children, Education minister Pat McGeer said Wednesday.

The special rate on third party liability will be available from all agents handling ICBC insurance.

The insurance will cover accidents involving private vehicles used for school activities.

Visiting Chinese impressed with fire-fighting methods

The absence of soldiers on city streets — especially in Ottawa — is one of the things which has puzzled members of a Chinese forestry delegation visiting Canada.

Tour guide and translator Edward Stechishen of the Petawawa National Foresty Institute, said the delegates are also surprised that governments in Canada own and control so few industries.

The delegates, on a tour organized by the Canadian Forestry Service, are in Victoria studying fire control techniques.

The group is headed by Shiguang Li, deputy director of the Forest Mangement Bureau in the Chinese ministry of forestry.

"We have about 10,000 forest fires a year, mostly all caused by man, compared to about 8,000 in Canada," he said.

Jian Bei Liu, of China's foreign affairs bureau, said members of the group have been highly impressed by methods used in Canada to contol forest fires.

The group Wednesday visited the Langford Ranger Station to see demonstrations of tools and equipment and infrared fire detection systems.

In the afternoon, they went by helicopter to view the operations of Pacific Logging in the Sooke area.

Today, they were the guests of the federal Pacific Forest Research Centre on Burnside Road.

Visiting Chinese try out infra-red scanners used in forest fire detection.

Failed product regains status

Weatherguard cellulose fibre insulation made by a Langley firm which lost its Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. approval number last week can still be used if it was manufactured or sold prior to last week, the CMHC announced Wednesday.

A CMHC official in Vancouver said he still has no official word from Ottawa on what homeowners or builders should do concerning the product made by PNW Fibretex Industries Ltd., but is recommending a temporary suspension in its use until the matter is clarified.

A spokesman for the manufacturer said that the CMHC had apologized to Fibretex officials in Ottawa, and had promised to reinstate its acceptance number but there was still no official word.

Last week the CMHC announced that Fibretex had lost federal approval because it failed a smoldering combustion test.

Canadian Cellulose of Edmonton, which ships some supplies to the Vancouver area but not Vancouver Island, and seven Ontario firms also lost their numbers, which means their product can't be used in any CMHC-financed construction or in CHIP, the federal insulation subsidy program which provudes $500 grants to homeowners who insulate their homes.

Fibretex marketing director Bill Alderson said his company's circumstances were different from the others because its test result was only one per cent under the allowable limit in only one of three "burns", which could be attributed to discrepancies in testing procedures by the lab.

Its number has been reinstated pending passage of a new combustion test and testing procedures have been altered by the CMHC to remove discrepancies, he said.

Cubbon's building supplies said this week it has Weatherwedge cellulose fibre insulation in stock and a spokesman at Butler Bros. said they have sold it in the past and have more on order.

Trustees all wet, says homeowner

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The Bunker Road resident sought support for his cause at the Colwood Ratepayers Association Tuesday night.

Jebbett said the original 25 householders on the waterworks system, who all live on Latoria Road, are looking out for themselves at the expense of late-comers.

He said about 25 homes on Bunker Road were added to the system eight years ago.

About 30 homes were on one pump that occasionally created problems but for eight years Jebbett and his neighbors had ample water for their homes and yards.

Suddenly, last summer, waterworks trustees (all three are Latoria Road residents) announced there would be alternate watering. Bunker Road residents weren't happy with the rule, but went along with it.

Then, on Aug. 4, a letter was sent out banning all further watering for all residents — except those on Latoria.

Irate Bunker residents thundered down the hill to Latoria, only to discover that the three trustees were all on vacation.

The waterworks people later refused to meet with Bunker Road people.

Jebbett said his anger boiled over one Wednesday when it was his turn to water. A neighbor told him the trustees had changed their minds again and he couldn't water at all.

"How can we break up this little dictatorial group?" he asked Colwood ratepayers.

The ratepayers agreed to investigate the matter, and Esquimalt-Port Renfrew MLA Frank Mitchell, who happened to be at the meeting, offered to assist.

Opening lead — king of clubs.

It took Sylvia a long time to learn point count. Not that she opposed point count as a matter of principle — she had a much better reason than that. The truth of the matter was that when Sylvia attempted to add up her points she would frequently miscalculate them and wind up with a wrong total.

Sylvia also had the curious notion that you measured a hand by the number of tricks you could take, and the number of points you held struck her as an exercise in futility.

Take this hand with which most members of the club, as South, would either pass or open three spades. But Sylvia appraised her hand differently. She felt she'd make lots of tricks with spades as trumps, so she opened one spade.

West bid two clubs, and it would have curdled your blood to hear the sound of North's double. Sylvia blithely jumped to four spades with her 6 points and you could hardly blame North for raising her to six.

It's easy to see that Sylvia had to lose a spade and a diamond and go down one. But defeat never even occurred to Sylvia. She rolled merrily along taking tricks left and right until she finally had twelve of them.

She trumped the club lead, played a spade to dummy's six, and ruffed another club. A heart to the queen and a club ruff were followed by a heart to the ace and another club ruff. Then, after a diamond to the king, Sylvia trumped dummy's last club. Now she led the ace and another diamond to East's queen.

This reduced her to two cards — the Q-J of spades. West had the K-4, and dummy had the ace of spades and nine of diamonds. When East now led a heart, Sylvia ruffed with the jack and West's invincible trump trick disappeared!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You bounce back from apparent adversity. Hunch provides enlightenment. Key is to act on what you perceive, to display courage of convictions. Emphasis on money in relation to partner, mate. You will fathom mystery.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Diversify, but do not scatter forces. Check legal rights, permissions. One close to you wants a "firmer" commitment. Aries, Gemini, Sagittarius natives figure in scenario. You get good news, but it is fragmented. It is to your advantage to wait, listen and observe.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Study Libra message—be thorough, specific, get puzzle pieces together in one complete picture. Basic contentions, issues are highlighted. Be aware of services, complaints, dependents and job opportunities. Aquarian figures prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Lunar aspect promotes creativity, change, activity in connection with speculation, children. Emotional involvement is accented; strive to give logic equal time. Acting impulsively might seem right, but the cost could be "extreme."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Home, security, getting rid of burden, completing significant transaction—these rate high on agenda. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure in scenario. You are in midst of "negotiations" which can result in profit for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Ideas abound, emotions are scattered—key is to bring order out of apparent chaos. Pisces, Virgo persons figure in scenario. Special calls, trips, active relatives are in picture. Define terms—be sure you are not being quoted out of context.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Regard this as power-play day. You're on brink of profitable discovery. You acquire needed material. Relationship intensifies—a commitment is requested and fulfilled. Aries, Capricorn persons figure prominently. Experience will pay dividends.

Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius natives play prominent roles in your life. December could be one of your most memorable months of 1979, a year featuring intensified relationships, travel and a variety of experiences.

War vowed against planned Hydro Peace dam

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Hydro's plan to develop the Site C hydroelectric power project on the Peace River near Fort St. John in northeastern B.C. calls for a dam that would create an 80-kilometre reservoir flooding about 8,000 acres of farmland.

Hydro's announcement Tuesday that it plans to apply for a water licence for the project brought immediate criticism from Patrick Michiel of Dawson Creek, chairman of the 500-member Peace Valley Environmental Association, who vowed a "long, tough fight" to keep the project from going ahead.

And Fort St. John mayor Pat Walsh said Wednesday his community is already booming and he's far from excited at the prospect of another dam. "We'll make our feelings clear through our solicitor at the water rights hearing and we'll be demanding very, very substantial compensation from Hydro," he said. "If Hydro thinks they can throw us an arena or a performing arts centre like giving a bone to a dog, then they can forget such peace offerings."

Site C is located 18 kilometres upstream from Taylor and about 6.5 kilometres southwest of Fort St. John. It would comprise a 60-metre-high earthfill dam across the river, with a spillway and powerhouse on the right bank. The power plant would contain six generating units with a total combined capacity of 975,000 kilowatts.

"We don't accept the fact that Hydro needs another dam," said Michiel. "There are other alternatives including conservation and other energy sources."

The association has produced a 12-page tabloid which is extremely critical of Hydro's approach and stresses the assets of the Peace Valley.

Jim Plotnikoff, spokesman for the B.C. Land Commission, said Wednesday the flooding caused by the dam will cover a total of 16,200 acres including 8,000 acres in the agricultural land reserve. He said 5,000 of these 8,000 acres are vegetable producing land.

He said Hydro has not applied to the commission for the removal of this land from the reserve. But he said it is possible for Hydro to go directly to the cabinet to get the land out of the reserve.

In a news release Tuesday, Hydro said that formal licensing applications have not yet been made. But the crown utility said it was releasing environmental and socio-economic reports on the project so that the public can review the proposal.

In accordance with provincial government policy, Hydro added, an environmental impact statement will be issued in advance of any public hearings.

Michiel said his association has been asking Hydro for months to release this impact report immediately.

"We're also sure that if Site C goes ahead then Site E near the Alberta border will follow in about 10 years and both dams would mean flooding of about 10 per cent of the class one agricultural land in the province," he said.

Mayor Walsh admitted that the Site C dam will make two improvements to the area — greatly increase its water supply and make it more accessible by providing another bridge across the Peace.

"The water on our doorstep will help industrial development and the new bridge will open up farming on the south side of the Peace and cut the length of the journey to Prince George," he said.

Other critics suggested that the dam is not necessary, that the power produced will be used for export to the United States, and that Hydro will have to borrow large amounts of money in international markets to finance the project.

"Hydro has an awful lot of power and no place to put it," said NDP energy critic Chris D'Arcy. "There is a firm capacity and in fact over-capacity in B.C., so it would seem Hydro's interests lie more with exports to the U.S."

John Helliwell, a University of B.C. economist, said B.C. needs a new Hydro rate structure, not a new dam.

"My guess is that with any appropriate rate structure and any economic use of power co-generation in the pulp and paper industry, Site C would not be required for quite some time," Helliwell said.

Like many other North American utilities, Hydro has been over-building recently and now has excess capacity, he said.

Cops are regaining their old TV status

NEW YORK (UPI) — The unofficial ban on violence in television series has been shot down this season and the screams of mayhem are being heard in the U.S.

After several seasons of playing down violence on television, in response to criticism from a wide variety of groups from the PTA to the American Medical Association, cops are regaining their old status as the alter ego of television comedy, the easy way to offer an alternative to sitcoms that the man in the family will watch.

And that violence is not counting football.

Looking over the new schedule, there's CBS with Paris and Big Shamus, Little Shamus added to Hawaii 5-0 and Barnaby Jones.

NBC offers Eischied for cop fanciers, A Man Called Sloane for spy fans, From Here to Eternity: The War Years for Second Worl War nostalgics, and Buck Rogers in the 25th Century for sci-fi groupies, along with old-line Rockford Files. ABC, king of the comedies, presents 240-Robert and Hart to Hart, along with Charlie's Angels and Vega$.

As various observers of the passing screen scene have commented, television works in cycles and supressed violence now is re-erupting.

The only one of the new action shows to hit family viewing hour is Buck Rogers, and that's the kind of comic book fantasy violence that psychologists find least disturbing to young personalities.

Most of the violence comes later in the evening — in the 10-11 p.m. slot, when presumably the tots have toddled off to bed.

Claude Akins comfie as Sheriff Lobo

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Claude Akins' creased and seamy face folded itself into a grin as he admitted he's a workaholic who feels right at home in his new TV series The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo.

Akins gauges his life in terms of golf and acting. When he has enough time to whittle his golf handicap down to a 6 or 7, he knows he's not working enough.

But even when he is slaving away five days a week, 14 hours a day, he does manage to put in some time on the putting green he has installed on his half-acre plot in the San Fernando Valley.

He also jumps into the family swimming pool every morning the year around to swim a few dozen laps to keep himself physically fit.

Claude and his wife, Therese, have been married 27 years and are the parents of Claude Jr., 22, a college student, Wendy, 20, an interior decorator, and Michelle, an 18-year-old high school student.

Their home is a comfortable, rambling California ranchstyle dwelling — which they built in 1960 — and which is in the process of being enlarged to include a special TV-game room.

Therese loves antiques and has decorated the house with a number of colorful pieces of furniture, including an 1850s Seth Thomas clock with chimes and a battered rolltop desk which reposes in Claude's den.

Claude's hideaway is decorated with his collection of dozens of ancient golf clubs, wooden-shafted irons and woods. He's most proud of a 1925 set of collector's items woods which have been refurbished.

Now that he's immersed in the new NBC comedy show Claude can only play golf on the weekends at one of the two country clubs to which he belongs. When time allows, he plays with the Hollywood Hackers at charity tournaments.

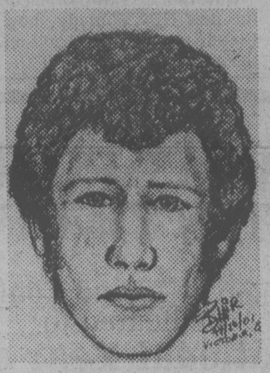
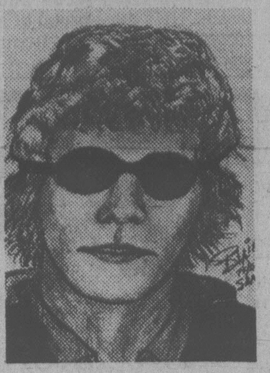
Police seek help



. . . stabbing suspect



. . . assault suspect

The sexual assault of two University of Victoria co-eds has brought an appeal by Saanich police for help in tracing a suspect who wears dark ski goggles and carries a knife.

At the same time, police asked for help in locating a young man who stabbed a 34-year-old motorist in Beaver Lake Park Sept. 20.

In the first UVic incident, a student was accosted as she sat in her car in a parking lot near the Cunningham Building at 10:30 p.m. Monday.

Police said a man, believed to be in his late teens, forced his way into the car at knifepoint and ordered the woman to drive to an unlighted part of the lot where he assaulted her.

Two weeks earlier, a woman student was approached in the same way near the MacLaurin Building at 9:45 p.m. and forced to drive to a secluded nearby area.

She was made to undress and was indecently assaulted. Police said her attacker tried to rape her before she broke free and ran for help.

Detectives have appealed for women who have had a similar experience to come forward to Saanich or Oak Bay police immediately.

The suspect in the sex assaults is clean-shaven, about five feet, seven inches tall with medium length sandy to blonde banged hair. He wore dark, mirrored glasses with red frames, possibly ski goggles, with an elastic band encircling the head.

Police are also seeking clues in the stabbing at Beaver Lake of John Robert Cassie of Victoria.

Cassie was visiting the south end of the park when a man stabbed him in the upper abdomen and fled.

The suspect is known to have hitched a ride on the Patricia Bay Highway towards Sidney.

One witness told police he picked up a man answering the subject's description near the entrance to the park and dropped him at the intersection of Claremont, only a few blocks along the highway.

Police want to hear from any motorists who may have given a ride around 9:45 that night.

The man sought is described as a white male, five feet, nine inches tall, 22 years old, weighing about 165 pounds, with acne-marked complexion, and light brown wavy or curly hair.

He wore a greenish army jacket, jeans and new running shoes and used a six-inch hunting knife with a broken handle.

Answer to yesterday's puzzle.

GARDENING
Jack Beastall

Experienced growers of the genus Gladiolus have their own particular ways of lifting, drying and storing the corms. While all methods are basically the same adjustments are made to suit the conditions one has for handling.

The corms vary in their ability to survive the winter outdoors. Due to intensive hybridizing many of the most desirable varieties have lost their resistance to cold wet soil and fail to appear the following spring.

This is one reason for the quite common belief that gladiolus corms change color. Some of them rot away when planted in too wet and cold a soil in spring, or when left in the soil over winter, while others thrive and multiply.

The hundreds of pea-size corms produced annually by some varieties add to this problem. If any of these are left in the soil they will increase to flowering size in three to five years.

This multiplication coupled with losses through rotting, causes the planting to become dominated by one color, leading to the belief the corms have some mysterious way of changing from one color to another. No gladiolus has ever changed its color in a commercial planting.

Most beginners buy a box containing corms of mixed varieties which are not named, therefore have no advance knowledge of what to expect in the way of flowers. Some will be giant hybrids while others are the delightful small-flowered species.

When starting in this way it is helpful to plant the corms well spaced for the first year and label each plant with a number, recording a brief description of the flowers in the garden notebook.

At lifting time each plant and all its small offsets is kept separate with its number attached. It is important to remove all the offsets from the soil, using a wire screen for sifting if necessary.

The gladiolus corms are ready to lift as soon as the foliage loses its rich green coloring. The main pest of gladiolus is the thrips which cause a streaking of the leaves. If present, all foliage should be cut off, removed from the area and burned or scorched in a hot incinerator fire before the corms are lifted. In any case, the foliage is cut about two inches above the corm before drying.

The lifted corms have two distinct parts; the new corm made this year and the old withered corm attached to its base. The secret of successful storage is to dry the corms quickly so that the old corm detaches itself before rot sets in between it and the basal plate of the new corm.

To do this requires a warm dry place where the corms can be spread on a fly-screen rack with a small electric fan beneath to circulate warm air through the rack.

Frequent checking is needed, pressing the old corm gently with the thumb until it eventual comes free. It must not be pulled or forced away because that will tear the base of the new corn and render it useless.

Storage over winter can be in discarded nylon stockings or mesh bags hung in a warm, but not hot or too dry an atmosphere. Plastic bags are not suitable because of sweating.

Next year the flowering size corms should be planted in a new place. The original planting site is not used for about four years so that any offsets left in the soil can grow to flowering size and be identified, and not become mixed with the regular planting stock.

The pea-sized corms can be planted in rows in the vegetable garden to grow on for four years, or burned in an incinerator. If planted each group is identified by name or number.

When lifting can be done while the soil is still dry the problem of drying before rot sets in is considerably lessened.

Bolster China - U.S. study

By RICHARD BURT
New York Times

WASHINGTON — A U.S. defence department study has concluded that the United States should take steps to bolster China's military potential so that Peking could come to the assistance of the West in the event of major war with the Soviet Union.

Although the study does not endorse any specific options for enhancing Peking's military power, it recommends that several possible steps should be examined, including the provision of advanced technology and intelligence data to China, the sale of advanced arms, Chinese production of American military hardware and joint military exercises between the two countries.

Saying that "China plays a pivotal role in the global balance of power," the secret study, which was prepared for Secretary of Defence Harold R. Brown last April, argues that "during a worldwide war, it would be to our benefit to encourage Chinese actions that would heighten Soviet security concerns."

"Such encouragement," it adds, "could include arms transfers or the employment of American forces in joint operations." A copy of the study was obtained by The New York Times.

The study, entitled Consolidated Guidance Number 8: Asia During a Worldwide Conventional War, was described by the Defence Department Wednesday as a "staff study." In a statement, a Pentagon spokesman said "it in no way represents the policy of the Department of Defence or the United States government. The study is purely a think piece."

The study is one of 11 reports commissioned by Brown last year to aid senior defence officials in making military policy and spending decisions over the next five years. The Pentagon routinely conducts such studies to assess the nation's military posture.

The possibility of establishing some form of military ties with Peking has taken on new significance with the disclosure earlier this week that Brown is planning to visit China late this year or early in 1980. The visit, the first ever by an American defence secretary, has not been announced officially, but senior officials, have said privately that Brown would discuss "security problems of mutual interest" with his Chinese counterpart.

Brown's visit, together with the Pentagon report on American military options for cooperating with China, seem to reflect a gradual, but nonetheless noticeable shift in American policy toward Peking. The idea of a visit by Brown to Peking had generated intense controversy within the administration and some officials speculated that the disclosure of the Pentagon report was designed to scuttle the trip.

The question of whether the United States should establish military ties of some form with China is one of the most sensitive foreign policy issues facing the Carter administration.

Meanwhile, Carter administration officials today sought to minimize the study.

In a statement, Pentagon spokesman Thomas Ross described the 1978 study by the defence department's international security affairs office as "primarily a think piece" that assessed the "worldwide implications of a possible Warsaw Pact attack upon NATO."

"It was not a study of China, U.S. or Soviet policy," the statement said. "It in no way represents the policy of the department of defence or the United States government. It is primarily a think piece.

Appearing on NBC-TV's Today show this morning, State Secretary Cyrus Vance also dismissed the importance of the study.

"We have no intention of changing our policy," he said. "We are not going to sell arms to China."

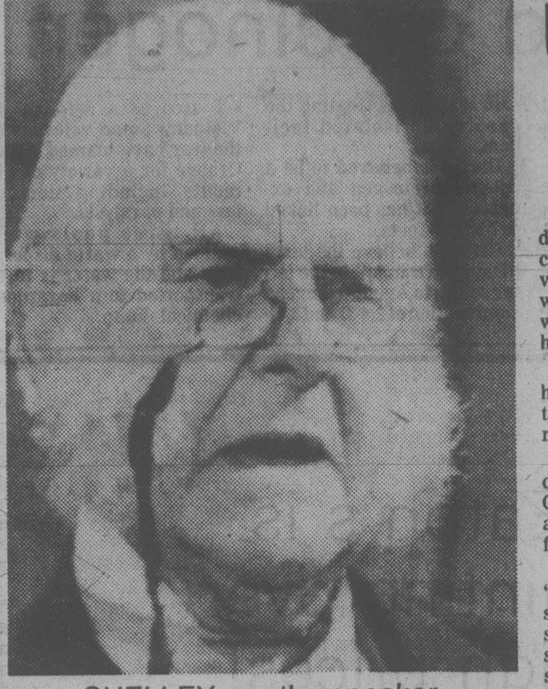
U.K.'s wartime inspiration really Winnie (The Pooh)



SHELLEY . . . the speaker

CHURCHILL . . . the writer

LONDON (AP) — The determined, defiant words were Winston Churchill's. But the deep and resolute voice which promised that Britons would fight on and "never surrender" was that of a BBC actor, the stand-in has revealed after 39 years.

"Very nice," said Churchill when he heard Norman Shelley's impersonation of him. "He's even got my teeth right."

The date was June 4, 1940, and Churchill was reporting to the House of Commons on the defeat of the British army in France and its evacuation from Dunkirk.

"We shall not flag or fail," he said. "We shall fight on the beaches, we shall fight on the landing grounds, we shall fight in the fields and in the streets, we shall fight in the hills. We shall never surrender."

Churchill had been prime minister for only 26 days. He was too busy with the war to repeat the speech for the broadcasts he felt were needed to defy Hitler, to buck up Britain's forces and her territories overseas and to reassure the U.S. that the British would not collapse like the French.

He ordered the British Council to find a double for his voice. The council went to the British Broadcasting Corp., and the BBC produced Shelley, a staff actor who played A. A. Milne's bear, Winnie the Pooh, on a children's program.

Shelley, now 76, told the Daily Mail newspaper he was a fan of the other Winnie and had imitated his unmistakable voice around the BBC.

"Someone must have remembered this," he said, "because they summoned me to the old transcription service studios near Regent's Park, gave me a copy of his speech, sat me down and told me to get on with it.

"It was just another job. As I recall, I did it in a couple of takes. I was sworn to secrecy about the whole thing but I can't see that it matters now."

Daily Express columnist Jean Rook disagreed. "It's like being told the Parthenon is reinforced concrete and the Mona Lisa is an enlarged holiday snap," she wrote. "It smashes the illusions and breaks the hearts of millions . . . We won the war on Winnie's words. Ate them like rations. Used them like an air-raid shelter. Fired them, like ack-ack, at the enemy. Rang them like church bells when it was over."

A BBC spokesman said Shelley's recording was beamed overseas but was not broadcast to Britain. Churchill himself later recorded all his major wartime speeches on phonograph records. He died in 1965 at the age of 90.

Huge Soviet grain sale likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Another short harvest is driving the Soviet Union into the U.S. grain market in a big way, raising the possibility that wheat and corn sales may rise to a record level in the coming year.

The U.S. agriculture department said Wednesday the Soviet Union has been told it can buy up to 25 million metric tons of wheat and corn in the year that began Oct. 1. That is 60 per cent more than the 15.7 million metric tons actually purchased in 1978-79 and would represent about 10 per cent of the U.S. crop.

The Soviets had prior authorization to buy 17 million tons last year — compared with the 15.7 million actually purchased — and Undersecretary Dale Hathaway noted that the permission to purchase 25 million tons this year does not necessarily mean the Soviets will actually buy that much.

The agriculture department currently estimates that the Soviet Union, beset by a poor harvest this year, will import about 32.5 million metric tons of grain next year from all foreign sources, including the United States.

Hathaway told reporters the nod to the Soviets simply means they can buy up to 25 million metric tons during the next 12 months without further consultation with U.S. officials.

Under a grain-purchase agreement worked out in 1975, the Soviet Union is committed to buy a minimum quantity of U.S. wheat and corn each year. If substantially larger amounts are desired, the agreement requires U.S. approval.

Announcement of the agreement for the coming year was made after discussions earlier Wednesday with Soviet officials.

Hathaway said the United States has a huge supply of grain, including a record corn crop that farmers now are harvesting. If the Soviet Union does buy the full 25 million metric tons of wheat and corn, he said, the sales "would not have a significant effect" on prices.

For example, U.S. wheat production this year is estimated at 57.8 million metric tons, of which 38.1 million are expected to be exported to all foreign buyers. The corn crop is estimated at 184.6 million metric tons and exports at 63.5 million.

Responding to questions from reporters, Hathaway said SALT II and the presence of Soviet troops in Cuba were not discussed in the grain negotiations. He said the meetings, held twice a year under the agreement, traditionally do not include such political subjects.

Jumper lands on paper boy

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (UPI) — A young woman who jumped from a 10th floor in a suicide try landed atop a newspaper vendor and survived, but the vendor was seriously injured.

Police said Rosa Santos Prata, 22, leaped and landed on Jose Carneiro, 42, a newspaper vendor in Rio's Copacabana beach-front district.

Careiro was hospitalized and in a coma with severe injuries. Miss Prata suffered light injuries.

U.S. lops $45M off aid to Syria

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Senate appropriations commttee, accepting contentions that Syria has hindered peace efforts in the Middle East, has voted to deny it $45 million in new foreign aid.

Senator William Proxmire (Dem. Wis.) sponsored the amendment striking the money from a pending foreign aid bill.

"Of all the countries in the world Syria should be at the bottom of the list of foreign aid recipients," Proxmire said, citing Syria's opposition to the Middle East peace treaty, occupation of Lebanon, and support for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

He noted that at the recent conference of so-called nonaligned nations in Cuba, Syrian President Asad "fiercely condemned the U.S. and the Camp David agreements."

"If this was not enough, Damascus radio has been monitored saying that Syria will arm the PLO," Proxmire said.

Stomach probe truly 'Nasty'

SEATTLE (AP) — Fist aid helped relieve a two-metre reptile of stomach pangs and a tummy full of loose change during a ticklish operation this week.

Nasty, a 38-kilogram caiman, a relative of crocodiles and alligators, got his belly rubbed from the inside when Judy Sievert plunged her hand down his gullet Tuesday to retrieve 21 pennies and a nickel, all in pursuit of reptilian good health.

Nasty's problem was that in his 10 or so years at Seattle's Woodland Park Zoo, he swallowed money tossed into his pit by passersby for good luck.

After Nasty went six weeks without eating and began losing weight, an X-ray revealed his nest egg.

Ms. Sievert went in through a plastic pipe after Foster sedated Nasty. Ms. Sievert, 24, a zoo volunteer, was summoned because she is 6 feet 2 inches tall and slim, with arms to match her height — and Nasty's gullet.

While her fingers probed Nasty's innards and her arm was buried to the armpit, Nasty awoke and began thrashing. Ms. Sievert's eyes grew wide as Foster and six helpers pinned the reptile down.

A moment later, Nasty paid dividends. He not only gave up his booty but, to the horror of gathered reporters, threw up all over them.

Love Canal class suit dismissed by judge

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — A $2.5 billion class action claim filed on behalf of about 900 residents and former residents of the old Love Canal chemical dump site neighborhood in Niagara Falls, N.Y. has been dismissed.

Justice Joseph Kuszynski of New York Supreme Court rejected the claim Wednesday but said individual lawsuits could be filed. A claim is usually the first step in seeking damages and, if not settled, is usually followed by a lawsuit.

The giant claim was filed last year against the city, its school board and Niagara County.

Hooker Chemicals and Plastics formerly operated the dump and the property was later taken over by the school board. A school was built on the site and homes and roads nearby.

The state health department declared an emergency at the site in August, 1978, after chemicals bubbled to the surface and the department began finding evidence of higher than average miscarriage and birth defect rates.

The state evacuated more than 200 families from homes close to the old dump. Officials say they expect to complete construction of a multi-million dollar cleanup project later this month.

In his ruling, Kuszynski said the state's General Municipal Law precludes class actions "arising from exposure to deleterious chemical wastes."

He said that since personal injuries and property damages allegedly caused by the dump are not identical and took place at different times, they must be dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

The judge said "unlike the situation of an accident, disaster or holocaust which brings about an injury with a definite starting point, the claimed basis for the injuries here is exposure over a period of time to deadly toxic chemical wastes."

He said the courts cannot consider class action because different forms of injury are alleged.

South Africans reject eased laws

JOHANNESBURG (Reuter) — South African voters have apparently firmly rejected a recent call by Prime Minister Pieter Botha for the country to relax its attitudes on race relations.

Botha's governing National party held on to all four seats in byelections held Wednesday but voters stayed away in droves and the party saw its majorities savagely slashed.

In the mining constituency of Rustenburg, it came within 850 votes of losing the seat to the far-right Herstigte Nasionale party.

The diehard pro-apartheid group which broke from the National party 10 years ago won 4,022 votes in Rustenburg against only 948 in the 1977 general election. The National party vote slumped from 7,664 in 1977 to 4,868, cutting its majority from 6,716 to 846.

The National party is likely to argue that Rustenburg is a special case. White miners are one of the most right-wing groups in the country and have objected to Botha's plans to extend labor union rights to blacks.

But the party did badly in other contests in the mini-election widely considered to be a test of Botha's statements that South Africa must change, even within the framework of apartheid, or face a black revolution.

Slaying resumes in Ulster

BELFAST (AP) — A youth shot and killed a middle-aged woman Wednesday when she answered a knock at her front door, police said. She was the first person killed in Northern Ireland since Pope John Paul appealed for an end to violence.

The woman lived in the Roman Catholic Springfield Road district of Belfast. She was the 81st person to die this year in the continuing violence in Northern Ireland that has claimed 1,973 lives in 10 years.

Police said two youths escaped on a motorcycle after the killing.

'Sloppy' N-dump closed in Wash.

OLYMPIA, Wash. (AP) — Gov. Dixy Lee Ray is closing the low-level nuclear waste storage dump at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation as of 6 a.m. Thursday, the governor's press secretary said Wednesday night.

Janet Smith said Ray made the decision to temporarily close the dump near Richland in south-central Washington after the Washington State Patrol reported three improper shipments Wednesday.

One truck was hauling liquid wastes, the waste on another was improperly packaged and the third truck was overloaded, Ms. Smith said.

"We will not tolerate sloppy procedures," Ray said.

007's 'M' tackles IRA

LONDON (CP) — Spymaster Sir Maurice Oldfield, after 40 years in the cloak-and-dagger business, is switching targets from the Soviet KGB to the Irish Republican Army.

The chubby, gentle bachelor, who over the years has made three frustrated attempts to embark on an intellectual career, has accepted an appointment to co-ordinate security policy in Northern Ireland.

Oldfield was used as the model for "M," the spy chief in the James Bond novels, and as George Smiley, the aging security fox in the book Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy.

Oldfield, a dead ringer for the late Charles Laughton if you can imagine Capt. Bligh in horn-rimmed spectacles, officially retired earlier this year, aged 64, as head of British security forces — in other words, Britain's top spy.

Sir Maurice made his first try at an academic career when he graduated with honors in history from Manchester University in 1939.

The Second World War intervened and he went into security and intelligence with the British Army in the Middle East, rising to lieutenant-colonel.

Later, he joined the intelligence service known as SIS.

His second attempt to resume the quiet life came in 1977 when he first tried to retire.

Prime Minister James Callaghan prevailed on him to stay until a successor could be found. At the time, the quiet espionage expert had been planning to take up an Oxford fellowship. He was knighted in 1978.

Oldfield became head of all British secret services in 1973, although he remained throughout his career listed on government rolls as a member of the diplomatic service.

His cover was blown that same year by a United States magazine not subject to British secrecy laws.

At one time he worked under Kim Philby, probably the most highly-placed Soviet secret agent in British history. It was Oldfield who exposed him, took his job and, later, repaired the damage Philby had done to British-U.S. relations in Washington.

On his time off, he visits the family farm in Derbyshire and drinks beer in the local pub. Otherwise, possibly as a result of his past activities, he drinks vodka.

In Belfast, he will be directly responsible to Humphrey Atkins, the secretary for Ulster. He will have a joint staff, drawn from military and police forces and the civil service.

Rare twister ravages Connecticut

WINDSOR LOCKS, Conn. (AP) — A freak tornado killed one person, left 118 others in hospital and caused damage estimated at more than $100 million as it tore through north-central Connecticut.

The Wednesday afternoon twister, accompanied by a storm packing winds of up to 138 kilometres an hour, destroyed a collection of rare airplanes and blew away homes and businesses through parts of Windsor and Windsor Locks.

"They wandered around saying, 'Gee, my house just blew away,'" Rev. James Silver said of the survivors of the storm. Silver's Congregational Church in Poquonock lost its roof and steeple to the winds.

Gov. Ella Grasso, who lives in Windsor Locks, declared an 8 p.m. to 5 a.m. curfew in the stricken area to prevent looting and vandalism.

She dispatched 200 National Guardsmen to enforce the curfew and patrol the area. Mrs. Grasso, whose home was not damaged, said an application for federal disaster aid is being drawn up.

Bradley International, the state's major airport, was closed today, its regular and backup electrical power knocked out and the airfield strewn with the splintered wreckage of helicopters and airplanes.

Rescue efforts after the storm were hindered because most of the Connecticut National Guard's helicopter fleet was destroyed. The few available helicopters were broght in from other parts of the state to fly the most seriously injured to hospitals while roads remained blocked by debris.

The tornado — not predicted by weather forecasters — destroyed the airport's Bradley Air Museum and its collection of rare and antique military aircraft.

There was no immediate count of the number left homeless by the twister. Authorities are searching again today to determine if any victims are trapped beneath the rubble of scores of homes and businesses.

Killed when flying lumber struck his pickup truck was William Kowalsky, 24, of Manchester. Ten of the 118 persons admitted to hospital — one a ten-month-old baby — are in critical condition.

About 180 other persons received treatment at makeshift first-aid stations or were released after hospital treatment, said Dr. Douglas Lloyd, state public health commissioner.

Raymond LaMontt, 58, of Hartford, was driving when the storm struck. The twister hurled a large sign, then an airplane on to his car, crushing it.

"It was like a science fiction movie — a big monster coming at you — like there was something outside the windows," said LaMontt, who is in good condition in hospital.

The National Weather Service at the airport had issued no tornado watch advisory when a wave of thunderstorms moved into the state. When the twister struck just before 3 p.m. EDT, forecasters reported 138 km-h winds and issued a severe thunderstorm warning.

Pools laced with suspected carcinogen

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Health officials, warned by a bizarre anonymous letter, said Wednesday that hundreds of people may have been exposed to a suspected cancer-causing chemical deliberately dumped in three swimming pools.

Traces of Silvex, a powerful herbicide, and the chemical 2,4-D, which contains the suspected carcinogen dioxin, were discovered last week in a pool at Oakwood Gardens North, a 1,000-unit complex in west San Jose. Similar traces were found Tuesday in two pools at Oakwood Gardens South, a 780-unit complex about a mile away.

Both apartment complexes are owned by RB Enterprises but officials said an investigation turned up no clues why chemicals were dumped in them.

The apartment manager of the North complex and the San Jose Mercury News were warned in a letter opening with the phrase "Days of Orange," that chemicals had been placed in the pools.

Public health engineer Bill Mapes said samples from the pools showed that a 41,000-gallon spa contained .035 parts per million of Silvex and .044 of 2,4-D.

The main pool, 71,000 gallons, contained lower levels of Silvex only and the pool at the North complex contained 0.1 parts per million of Silvex and 0.1 of 2,4-D.

Mapes said the concentrations were not lethal but apartment manager Killian Byrne warned anyone who might have used the pools to see a physician as soon as possible.

The Health department said it was was treating the case as an isolated incident.

Dioxin is believed to be a potent carcinogen and experts say it has been linked to birth defects.

Officials believe the term "Days of Orange" in the letter refers to Agent Orange, a combination of 2,4-D and 2,4,5-T used as a defoliant in Vietnam. Some veterans of the war have blamed Agent Orange for a variety of ailments, including memory loss and paralysis.

All three pools were drained by a waste disposal firm and the water is to be transported to a hazardous chemical dump.

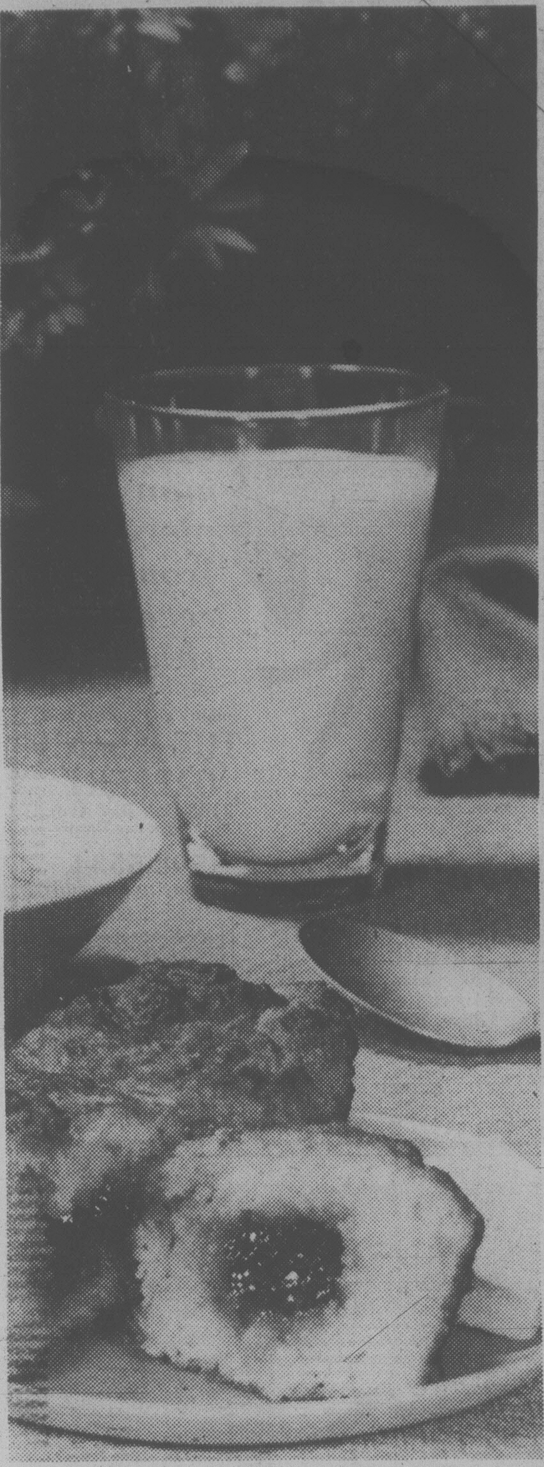
Content of alcohol reason for caution



Healthier, easier on the liver

Alcohol is a potent junk food, high in calories — a two-ounce (59.15 ml) martini provides 150 — and almost devoid of anything else of nutritional value. For this reason alone there are good grounds for very moderate use. But there are other reasons as well, as recently reported by experts assembled by the American Society for Clinical Nutrition.

This group of experts looked into the relationship between diet and various diseases and concluded that prolonged overconsumption of alcohol almost certainly will produce one of three serious, if not fatal, liver problems: cirrhosis, fatty liver, and alcoholic hepatitis.

Cirrhosis, the most serious, is an irreversible condition in which fibrous deposits build up in the liver. It is seven times more common in alcoholics than in nondrinkers and is much more prevalent in states like Massachusetts, which have a high alcohol consumption per capita, than in states like Utah, where consumption is low. The longer the drinking continues, the greater the chances of its development. Eventually, between 10 and 20 percent of all heavy drinkers will develop cirrhosis.

The effects of alcohol on the development of cirrhosis have been studied in experimental animals and in people who are victims of the disease. For example, baboons, who react much like human beings when under the influence of alcohol, were given half their daily calories in the form of alcohol and fed, in all other respects, a nutritionally adequate diet. As time went on, they developed fatty livers, hepatitis, and finally cirrhosis.

Studies of human alcoholics show the same results. But since most heavy drinkers do not have scientists planning their diets, their problem is often compounded by malnutrition. One study of German alcoholics, who for over 25 years had consumed between one-third and one-half of their total calories as alcohol, revealed that 50 percent had severe liver disease.

Other studies using volunteers who were not heavy drinkers showed that, even on good diets, the addition of substantial amounts of alcohol caused fat to accumulate in the liver, while diets that substituted carbohydrate for alcohol calories had no such effect. Fortunately, fatty liver and hepatitis can be completely reversed if alcohol is removed from the diet. However, this is not true of cirrhosis.

We still do not know just how alcohol damages the liver, but there is general agreement that the alcohol itself is probably toxic, and that the effects are made worse by malnutrition. Since alcohol blunts the appetite while it provides calories, the more that is drunk the greater the risk that the person will not eat enough food to meet his or her nutrient requirements. In addition, alcohol metabolism actually increases the need for some nutrients, like the B vitamin thiamin.

Turning to the other side of the coin what are the risks of reducing large alcohol intakes? The experts could come up with none, except for the temporarily unpleasant withdrawal for those who have become dependent on alcohol. The benefits, on the other hand, are many. The report cites the experience of countries such as Norway and Sweden with vigorous alcohol-control programs which have significantly cut the rate of liver diseases and other physical and mental health problems from alcohol abuse. Similarly, the Canadians, who have put very heavy taxes on alcohol, found that liver diseases fell in prevalence after the taxes went into effect.

As a matter of fact, this is what happened in the U.S. in the 'dry decade' of the 1920s when Prohibition was in effect. Death rates from cirrhosis fell from the World War I rate of 11 per 100,000 to seven. When repeal was passed in the early '30s the rates went right back to 11.

Of course, we do not advocate a return of Prohibition as an answer. Nor do the experts who prepared the report. But at the same time, we need to do what we can to decrease excessive alcohol consumption, particularly since its harmful effects are most apparent at high doses.

Moderation is clearly in order.

According to a study conducted ten years ago, only five per cent of elementary school children were eating good breakfasts each day. Among the high school students surveyed, nearly one third regularly had no breakfast at all.

Improving upon morning eating habits is not that difficult a task. Actually, a nutritious breakfast can be built around a bowl of fortified cereal with milk. Fortified cereal contributes generous amounts of important nutrients such as iron, niacin, and thiamin. Milk is an excellent source of calcium, as well as vitamins A and D.

Presweetened Cereals is a free 8-page booklet that is offered by Kellogg Salada Company. This booklet discusses the nutritional value of presweetened cereals — the breakfast cereals which have gained considerable popularity and criticism in recent years.

The development of an efficient transportation system has posed a tremendous challenge for Canada. In terms of area, Canada is the second largest nation in the world. While our population is concentrated along our southern borders, there are great distances separating the major population centres. Similarly, although Canada has an abundance of natural resources, many of these are located in remote, barely accessible regions.

Canada's harsh climate has further complicated the construction of a national transportation system.

Transportation — a Unifying Link, is a 38-page book that describes how Canada has responded to the trials of building an effective system of transportation. The book is available free of charge from the Canadian Unity Information Office, Box 1986, Station "B", Ottawa, Ontario, K1P 6G6.

New York

The stock market rose today, apparently passing up news that wholesale prices had risen at a 16.8 per cent annual rate in September in favor of word of a plunge in the price of gold.

Just before the market opened, the labor department said that its producer price index had risen 1.4 per cent in September, the largest monthly jump since 1974 and an annual rate of 16.8 per cent. Analysts said the news might further damage the U.S dollar. The dollar was mixed in overseas trading Thursday.

But the market apparently gained strength, experts said, from a plunge in gold prices to about $380 an ounce, about $18 below Wednesday's prices and $60 below the highs set earlier this week.

London

The Financial Times index was up 5.0 to 481.5.

Industrials, banks and insurances gained, oils were mixed and golds fell.

Canadian shares eased.

The bidding:

1♠	2♣	Dble	Pass
4♠	Pass	6♠	Pass
Pass	Dble	Redble

Opening lead — king of clubs.

It took Sylvia a long time to learn point count. Not that she opposed point count as a matter of principle — she had a much better reason than that. The truth of the matter was that when Sylvia attempted to add up her points she would frequently miscalculate them and wind up with a wrong total.

Sylvia also had the curious notion that you measured a hand by the number of tricks you could take, and the number of points you held struck her as an exercise in futility.

Take this hand with which most members of the club, as South, would either pass or open three spades. But Sylvia appraised her hand differently. She felt she'd make lots of tricks with spades as trumps, so she opened one spade.

West bid two clubs, and it would have curdled your blood to hear the sound of North's double. Sylvia blithely jumped to four spades with her 6 points and you could hardly blame North for raising her to six.

It's easy to see that Sylvia had to lose a spade and a diamond and go down one. But defeat never even occurred to Sylvia. She rolled merrily along taking tricks left and right until she finally had twelve of them.

She trumped the club lead, played a spade to dummy's six, and ruffed another club. A heart to the queen and a club ruff were followed by a heart to the ace and another club ruff. Then, after a diamond to the king, Sylvia trumped dummy's last club. Now she led the ace and another diamond to East's queen.

This reduced her to two cards — the Q-J of spades. West had the K-4, and dummy had the ace of spades and nine of diamonds. When East now led a heart, Sylvia ruffed with the jack and West's invincible trump trick disappeared!
